Drug Testing Program

The Army Drug Testing Program is a command program composed of the soldier, the commander, the Unit Prevention Leader (UPL), the Army Substance Abuse Program (ASAP) staff, the Forensic Toxicology Drug Testing Laboratories (FTDTL), the Medical Review Officer, and the Staff Judge Advocate. The program has three primary goals:

- First, to deter soldiers from abusing drugs (including illegal drugs and other illicit drugs).
- Second, as a tool for commanders to assess the security, military fitness, good order and discipline of their commands.
- Third, to serve as a basis to take appropriate action, adverse or other (including referral for treatment), with a soldier based on a positive test result.

Risk Reduction Program

- The Risk Reduction Program is a Commander's Program that is visually presented as a target which depicts 14 high risk behaviors.
