

Automated Shoot House

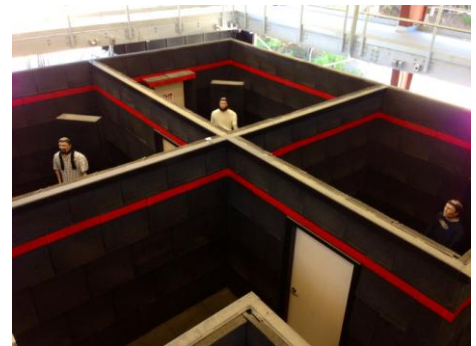

The Fort Devens Automated Shoot House is a fully recorded facility that provides units with a place to train and evaluate individual Soldiers and squads on tasks necessary to move tactically, engage targets, conduct breaches, and practice target discrimination in a live-fire environment.

A four-man team prepares to enter the shoot house corridor.

The live-fire Shoot House complex is a 4,200 square foot single story structure, with eight precision engagement rooms and adjoining corridors, a catwalk above the interior walls and perimeter, and a barn roof overhead. The instrumentation provides video and audio capture of unit training events that may be viewed in the AAR Theater after the training occurs.

After-Action Review Building

The AAR Theater contains the primary equipment and software used to record exercises in the Shoot House. Theater equipment includes a projector for displaying live action and recorded audio/video of exercises conducted in the Shoot House. The theater equipment is also used for conducting After-Action Reviews and producing a DVD Take Home Package.

Human Urban Target

The Shoot House is equipped with 10 Human Urban Targets (HUTs). The HUT unit is equipped with mortal and non-mortal hit sensing capabilities, and visual response to a kill shot. Available options include adding motion detecting devices, Multiple Integrated Laser Engagement Systems (MILES) Shoot back capability, and MILES interface kill feature.

As part of the Army's Sustainable Range Program we are committed to providing the best possible training events for our soldiers.
