SUMMER SAFETY

Rip Currents are powerful and fast-moving currents of water flowing away from shore. They can sweep even the strongest swimmers out to sea.

If you get caught in a rip current..

Remain calm. Conserve your energy and remember to breathe.

Go with the flow. Don't try to fight the current. Float or calmly tread water. Rip currents are not undertows. The current will eventually release you offshore. Once this happens, swim at an angle away from the current toward shore.

Call or signal for help if you still require assistance, or if there are large waves or shoreline hazards.

Sharks will usually leave human swimmers alone, but chance encounters do happen. Here are some tips to lessen the chance of a shark encounter:

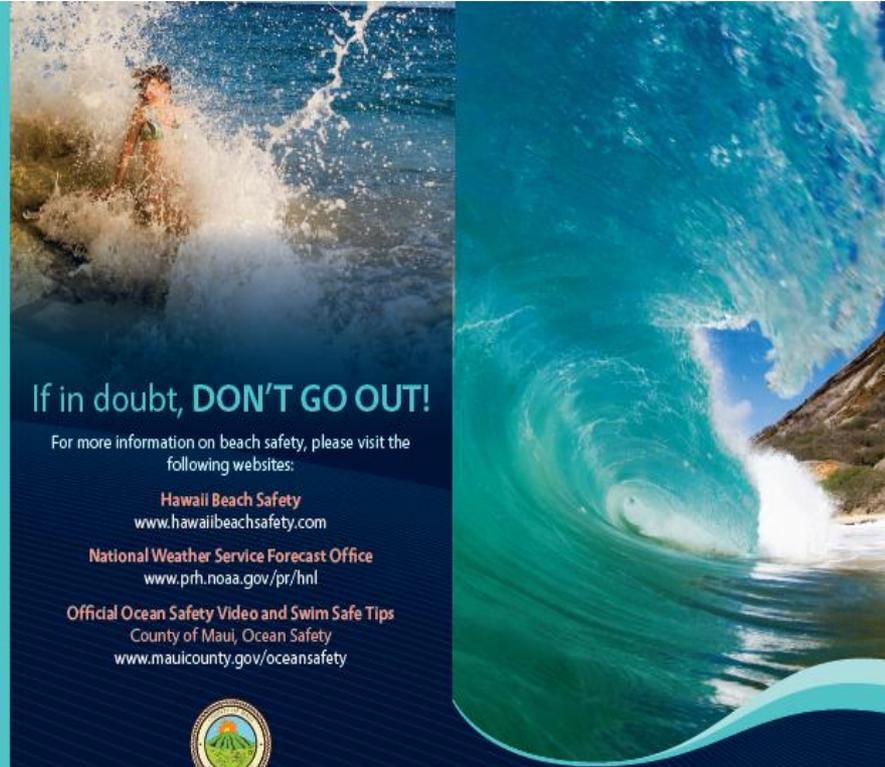

Do:

- Swim with a buddy or in a group.
- Leave the water if fish or turtles start to behave erratically.

Don't:

- Don't enter the water if you have any open wounds or are bleeding in any way. Sharks can detect blood and bodily fluids in extremely small concentrations.
- Don't enter the water when the water is murky, cloudy, polluted from run-off or has poor visibility for any reason.
- Don't enter the water at dawn, dusk or night when sharks are most active and/or moving closer to shore to find food. Be aware that some shark species, like tiger sharks, are always active, no matter what time of day.
- Don't swim, surf or dive near harbor entrances, river mouths and channels, especially after heavy rains. These types of waters are known to be frequented by sharks.

If in doubt, DON'T GO OUT!
