WHEELER ARMY AIRFIELD - Soldiers with the 58th Military Police Company returned from the hot desert sun in Iraq to tropical trade winds and lush landscapes during a redeployment ceremony, here, Friday.

During the ceremony, family members and friends welcomed home more than 150 Soldiers who spent the last 15 months at Forward Operating Base Normandy in the Diayla Province of Iraq.

"I have to say, I have a much greater appreciation for my husband since he has been gone," said Shila Dennis, wife of Capt. Frank Dennis. "I am really, really glad that he is finally home."

While in Iraq, 58th MP Soldiers played a vital role in training, coaching and mentoring Iraqi police forces as the Police Transition Team for the province.

Soldiers also carried out more than 1,000 combat patrols, trained more than 20,000 police forces, and conducted validation ceremonies for more than 15 Iraqi police stations. The Soldiers did a great job," said Capt.

Frank Dennis, 58th MP Co. commander. "They accomplished what they went there to do and more, and I couldn't be more proud of them.

When the troops return to the workforce and settle into their daily routines, they will conduct police patrols on post, along with additional training, to prepare them for their next deployment to Afghanistan in 2010.

"All in all, I think the deployment was a success. We accomplished our mission and did what we needed to do to get back here to our family and friends," said Spc. Jeremy Muncert, military police officer, 58th MP Co. "I'm glad to be back ... and that we came back with evervone we left with. Now I'm definitely looking forward to some down time.

'Lunch and Learns' serve up prevention

Staff Writer SCHOFIELD BARRACKS - Quintin Ewing and Bernadette Wong are on a mission. They are members of a small army of education and support professionals working to raise awareness about child abuse prevention, one family at a time.

Ewing, U.S. Army Garrison-Hawaii (USAG-HI), New Parent Support Program (NPSP), team lead, and Wong, prevention and education team member, are conducting "Lunch and Learns" at USAG-HI Child Development Centers (CDC) during the month of April.

At the events, the team offers parents a large menu of prevention, education and support services through the Army Community Service's Family Advocacy Program. Parents hungry for information about child rearing or family nurturing will likely find it here.

"The Lunch and Learns give the team an opportunity to talk to parents to find out

A Lunch and Learn team will be visiting today, 10:45-noon, at the Fort Shafter CDC, and 2:30-3:30 p.m., at Schofield Barracks CDC.

Teams will also visit Helemano CDC, April 17, 2-3 p.m., and Aliamanu Military Reservation CDC, April 24, 11-noon.

SGT. KYNDAL GRIFFIN 8th Th ater Sustainment Command Public Affairs FORT SHAFTER - After months of long days and preparation, the hard work of seven Hawaii Soldiers has finally paid off as they prepare to compete in the American Culinary Federation Regional Culinary Arts Competition in North Carolina, April 18.

The team of Soldiers, which is a special skills team, is the firstever military team to compete at this level.

'We are the first military team to get invited to something of this caliber; the only other team that actually does this competition on a civilian level is the US-ACAT team (Army Culinary Arts Team)," said Sgt. 1st Class Clinton Francis III, team leader and chief food operations noncommissioned officer with U.S. Army Garrison-Hawaii.

"We are the first installation team to ever make it this far ... so this is a pretty big deal," he added.

To qualify for the regional level, the team first had to compete in the Army's 34th Annual Culinary Arts Competition at Fort Lee, Va., where it placed first in the student skills part of the competition, besting 22 other teams and 122 competitors.

Francis said if the team wins at regionals, it will move on to the national competition in Orlando, Fla.

In preparation for the competition, the team worked 15- to 20-hour days. In addition to its normal duties in the dining facilities, team members studied basic knowledge of culinary arts and practiced their knife skills.

In the regional competition, Soldiers will be tested on producing a four-course menu and cold platter, and answering questions on culinary arts and knife techniques.

Garrison celebrates military children

COL. MARK C. BOUSSY Commander, U.S. Army Garrison-Oahu

This month's article highlights national level and Armywide campaigns in the month of April that emphasize both the importance of celebrating and safeguarding our children.

Month of the Military Child

The theme for this campaign is "Celebrating our Everyday Heroes." Since this campaign began in 1986, the Department of Defense (DoD) has teamed with various partners to recognize the sacrifices of and applaud the courage of military children.

More than 1.7 million children under the age of 18 have at least one parent serving in the military. According to estimates, the U.S. Army has more than 900,000 military children with one or both parents having deployed multiple times

In addition to many locally planned activities sponsored by the Directorate of Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation's (DFMWR) Child, Youth and School Services for this month, the Army has developed a "Month of the Military Child" Web site that lists general information about the month and installation activities, and displays personal stories from military children and their parents.

Parents of military children are encouraged to download, sign and present their children with the "Everyday Hero" certificate to reinforce parental appreciation of their children's courage and sacrifice

Military children can submit pictures and videos, as well. Items can be found at www.armymomc.org and www.armymwr.com/portal/ family/childandyouth/momc asp

Military children are a key element in the remarkable families that support our Soldiers. Quality of life is essential to retaining Soldiers and our all-volunteer force. Let's take this opportunity to thank and recognize our military children as "Everyday Heroes" and to honor their challenges and sacrifices

National Child Abuse and Neglect (CAN) Prevention Month

The theme for this campaign is "Act Now - Prevent Child Abuse and Neglect." The theme highlights the necessity to make child abuse and neglect a priority and to emphasize the importance of early identification and multiple prevention strategies. The "Act Now" message encourages personal responsibility within the family and serves as a call to action.

A responsive community has the potential to significantly reduce the preva-lence of child abuse and neglect by offering support and responding to the early warning signs of stress within Army families.

FTFTSTEPS in FAITH Jesus epitomizes Army value of selfless service

CHAPLAIN (MAJ.) DAMON ONELLION North Community Family Life Chaplain

Those of us who have been around the Army for any length of time are familiar with the Army value of selfless service. The "Army Values" card those of us in uniform have carried since our basic training days defines it this way: "Put the welfare of the nation, the Army and your subordinates before your own Selfless service, especially by leaders toward their subordinates, gives those we work with and serve beside the confidence to know we are looking out for them. They can take risks to accomplish the mission because they know we will take care of them and their families should something go wrong. When this value is demonstrated, it greatly contributes to unit cohesion.

Jesus had selfless service in mind when he said, "Greater love has no one than this, that he lay down his life for his friends" (John 15:13).

In the military, we often see minor examples of this kind of service. The buddy who agrees to pull my duty so I can have time to visit with my family members who came to town unexpectedly, or the neighbor who loans me his second car after mine is on the boat for a PCS (permanent change of station) move are just two examples.

Some of us may have even observed fellow Soldiers execute a mission in the face our path.

Even with the examples of selfless service I have seen during my military career, as I reflect on the events of Holy Week, I cannot think of a better example than that of our Lord.

Those of us who have grown up with the Christian traditions of how Jesus accepted his fate to die for our sins easily think of his crucifixion. However, as I reviewed these events in preparation for the various services taking place this week, I see a pattern that is even more selfless than I first assumed.

As Jesus entered Jerusalem on the donkey that first Palm Sunday, the people of Israel correctly assumed he was fulfilling the prophecies about the coming of the kingdom of God. They were expecting him to lead a revolt against the Roman government and were ready to proclaim him king.

When, however, he did not start the military revolt they were expecting and instead began to challenge the religious establishment of the day, many turned away from him. On Thursday evening, the day before the Passover, Jesus had only his 12 disciples still with him.

The climate of Israel in the first century was hot and dry as it is today. People wore sandals as they walked on the dusty roads For this reason, the common practice was to have someone - usually the lowest ranking member of a household (translated, the slave on the bottom of the pecking order, if there were more than one slave) - wash the guests' feet before dinner. As Jesus and his disciples gathered for the evening meal, the unspoken question on all his students' minds was "who is going to wash my feet?

No one wanted to volunteer, as that would be the same as admitting that he was the lowest ranking member of the group. Each feared he would be "voluntold" to do the task for the others. As such, no one said anything. The conversation at the table would soon reveal Jesus already knew Judas would betray him, and Peter would deny him before morning. Even so, he did the unthinkable; he took off his outer garments, wrapped a towel around his waist, filled a basin with water, and washed their feet.

He, who was their master, and the master of the universe for that matter, chose to care for their needs as if he were the lowest of servants

To serve our own family members and teammates, under the best of conditions, can be hard. If I am tired or if I have had a very demanding schedule, I can find myself resenting even the simplest of requests from my wife or children. How much harder it must have been for Jesus to serve the disciples when he knew one planned to sell him to the authorities for 30 pieces of silver, another would lie about their association using curses, and all but one of the others would abandon him within the next 12 hours.

Sergeant, private get 8 months confinement

During the past month, two Soldiers were tried, found guilty, and sentenced for various offenses occurring on and off Schofield Barracks.

A sergeant from D Troop, 2nd Squadron, 6th Cavalry Regiment, 25th Combat Aviation Brigade, was sentenced at a special courtmartial to be reduced to the grade of E-1, to be confined for eight months, to forfeit $1,700 pay per month for eight months, and to be discharged from the service with a bad conduct discharge for failure to be at his appointed place of duty, absence from his unit, failure to obey an order, dereliction of duty, false official statement, wrongful drug use, and wrongful appropriation.

A private from 2nd Battalion, 27th Infantry Regiment, 3rd In-fantry Brigade Combat Team, was sentenced at a special court-martial to be reduced to the grade of E-1, to be confined for eight months, and to be discharged from the service with a bad conduct discharge for attempted larceny, being absent without leave, false official statement, and larceny

In addition to forfeiture of pay (either adjudged or by operation of law), confinement and a punitive discharge, Soldiers will also have a federal conviction that they must report when filling out a job application. This federal conviction may strip these Soldiers of some civil rights, such as the right to purchase and maintain firearms and the right to vote.

of heavy enemy fire with the full knowledge that the next action might be their last. Though it is never easy to look to others' needs before our own, our shared experiences and common hardships resulting from the military lifestyle can encourage us to care for our comrades in arms and their families more readily than some who have not walked this weekend, remember Jesus' selfless service for each of us. If you care to look at the story of all that he did for the disciples (and by association, us, as well) even in the face of their self-centeredness and lack of loyalty, you can find the story in the Gospel of John, chapters 13 through 19.

Also, remember, you can't have Easter without Good Friday.

DEPLOYED FORCES HAWAII ARMY WEEKLY APRIL 10, 2009 | A-3 Combat medics keep Soldiers mission ready

Soldiers from 3rd Special Troops Battalion learn to become selfsufficient on the battlefield

TUZ, Iraq – A day in the life of a combat medic at Forward Operating Base (FOB) Bernstein, here, is never boring. Assigned to the Special Troops Battalion (STB), 3rd Infantry Brigade Combat Team, medics stay busy treating Soldiers throughout Salah ad-Din Province.

"We treat any injury or illness that comes our way," said Sgt. Mark Wagner. "We'll sew people up, prescribe medication for illness and examine all kinds of injuries.'

Since Soldiers often play sports to stay fit and combat ready, Wagner said medics treat the occasional sprained ankle or skinned elbow, as well. However, Wagner said medics most frequently treat for allergies and the common cold.

One combat medic, Spc. Michael Correa, goes out on missions in local Iraqi communities every day. When he's inside the FOB's gates, he works diligently on maintaining medical vehicles, treating Soldiers and studying.

"We see five or six patients per day," said Correa.

While on base, STB medics train other Soldiers to become qualified as combat lifesavers, those Soldiers who are first responders on the battlefield when a medic isn't present. In addition, when requested, combat medics also train personnel on specifics such as administering an IV (intravenous therapy).

As a level I facility, the FOB's aid station can treat a wide range of medical conditions. However, it has to draw the line when it comes to Xrays and lab work, but only because it doesn't have the necessary equipment. If a Soldier requires care beyond the scope of the aid station, they may be flown or driven to another medical facility that is better equipped.

Special Troops Battalion medics are preparing to conduct joint training with Iraqi medical personnel to share the latest information on procedures and technology. The training will include hospital and clinic visits, as well as first aid and emergency management techniques.

Army medics are only allowed to treat Iraqis if their injury could cause loss of life, limb or evesight. They may, however, examine and refer Iraqis to their own health care providers.

'Iraqi medical responders are taking over now. They're preparing to move forward on their own,' said Wagner.

325th BSB sorts half a million books for Iraqi children in Tikrit

Soldiers reach out to Iraqi communities, emphasize importance of education

TIKRIT, Iraq - Do you remember coming to class, sitting at the desk with your name written on it, and listening to your teacher as she told you to take out your new school book?

Do you remember the excitement of opening the book and turning the pages with eagerness to begin learning?

Soldiers of 325th Brigade Support Battalion (BSB), 3rd Infantry Brigade Combat Team, helped bring that excitement to Iraq as they packaged and prepared the first shipment of more than 600,000 "My Arabic Library" books at Contingency Operating Base Speicher, here, Saturday.

The books will be delivered to schools throughout the Salah ad-Din Province to establish better learning environments and library systems for Iraqi children.

"Giving children something that they can actually sit, read and hold gives them hope for their future," said Sgt. Suzanne Sippel, Provincial Reconstruction Team (PRT) member, 425th Civil Affairs Battalion. "The Iraqi children who will receive these supplies will eventually be the ones making the decisions for all of Iraq 25 years down the road.'

The distribution project started in April 2008, following an initiative from the Iraqi government and U.S. State Department. Iraqi officials spotted the need to start library programs within schools.

Iraqi officials and the PRT calculated the number of schools that would receive the books. They ordered 560 sets for Salah ad-Din Province, according to Capt. Miguel Benzor-Anaya, health service support officer, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 325th BSB.

Soldiers from 325th BSB sorted the books, which arrived in seven full tractor-trailer loads, into smaller packages destined for each of the qadas, or districts, in the province, said Benzor-Anaya.

"An additional purpose for establishing a library system within the Iraqi schools is to identify those schools that have an interest in teaching the English language - this will also lead to starting a "pen pal" program with children of the United States and establish more awareness for the situation here in Iraq," he said.

In addition to the pen pal program and schoolbook delivery, the PRT is also working on an overall education initiative that includes building and refurbishing public libraries and creating schools of excellence.

Each set of books contains 12 boxes, which are grade specific and are color coordinated to make organizing and distributing the materials easier. After noticing the books' impact on Iraqi children, PRT members sought and attained approval from the Iraqi government through the Ministry of Education to begin ordering more books. In addition to the books, coalition forces and the

The books will be delivered to Iraqi schoolchildren throughout the Salah ad-Din Province.

Iraqi government will work together to establish a teacher training program to enhance Iraqi teachers' ability to instruct their students, Sippel said.

"If these children will remember the school supplies and other initiatives that we have provided, it will start a positive ripple effect - that by doing one thing for these children, whether it be providing a book, shoes or a pencil, that one thing could eventually be the action that makes a difference in the world," said Sippel.

8th TSC's Jackson builds on family tradition of service

NCO's positive attitude makes interactions, work environment flow smoothly

CAMP ZAMA, Japan – Sergeant Major of the Army Kenneth Preston likes to say the Army is becoming a "family business." Preston also says young men and women today are more apt to serve if they have an example to follow in their immediate family.

Staff Sgt. Daniel Jackson, a Soldier with the 8th Theater Sustainment Command, had plenty of role models in his family when he decided to join the Army. In fact, he had four of them.

"My father retired as a first sergeant two years ago ... and three of my brothers and sisters have served," Jackson said." My sister went astray and joined the Navy, but it's all good."

Jackson is one of six children and calls himself an Army brat. He claims Jackson, Ala., as his hometown, but in reality, he's lived all over the world. "Growing up, we lived in Germany three times, in three different places," he said. "Fort Rucker, Fort Benning, Fort Gordon, Fort Polk ... lots of different schools, lots of friends, a lot of different cultures. It had a big effect on me and made me want to join the Army just to be around Soldiers."

Jackson's father served for 26 years as a single channel radio teletype operator. It's a military occupational specialty (MOS) that has the reputation of having a short life span in combat.

"You've seen those guys in the movies that always get shot at first, carrying the manpacks on their backs? That was my dad," Jackson explained.

Soldiering and the signal corps are just two things Jackson has in common with his father. When he pinned on sergeant's chevrons while deployed to Iraq in 2004, Jackson said he was on cloud nine because he knew he had made his father proud.

"My dad isn't much of a talker, but he said that I picked a good MOS and that he supports me 100 percent," Jackson said.

He has two back-to-back Iraq deployments under his belt, both when he was stationed at Fort Lewis, Wash., with the 29th Signal Battalion. Jackson had only nine months of dwell time between deployments, so it was a busy, stressful time in his career. "It (the deployments) really put things into perspective for me," he said. "When we returned from our second deployment, we spent more time with our families and loved ones to make up for all the time spent apart."

Jackson is currently deployed to Japan with the 8th Theater Sustainment Command (TSC) forward command post for a two-week exercise, and handles every issue thrown his way.

Sgt. Maj. Bill Kiefer, G-6 sergeant major, said Jackson is a stellar NCO on whom he can count to accomplish any mission, and that he's a great role model for young troops during this "Year of the NCO."

"(Jackson) is a very intelligent Soldier, extremely conscientious with everything he does, and he takes care of his troops. As his sergeant major, l couldn't ask for anything more," Kiefer said.

Jackson also has a great reputation in the 8th TSC as a customer-friendly NCO, completing all assigned tasks with a smile.

"There is a lot of stress involved in this job, and having a positive attitude makes life a lot easier, not only on you, but also on the customer," Jackson said. "It brightens up everyone's day and makes working a lot easier."

Newly minted leaders honored at NCO induction ceremony

SGT. KYNDAL GRIFFIN 8th Theater Sustainment Command Public Affairs

FORT SHAFTER – "No one is more professional than I. I am a Noncommissioned Officer, a leader of Soldiers."

These words from the NCO Creed were engrained into the minds of Soldiers as they prepared to become noncommissioned officers (NCOs). More than 20 Soldiers from the 8th Theater Sustainment Command (TSC) emphatically recited the NCO Creed after being inducted into the corps at Richardson Theater, here, Friday.

The NCO induction ceremony is a celebration of newly promoted Soldiers who have joined the ranks of a professional noncommissioned officer corps that began a tradition more than 10 years ago.

The ceremony honors the wisdom of the men and women of the NCO corps who have served with pride and distinction. During the ceremony, senior NCOs shared stories and experiences.

"It was an awesome opportunity for all the new NCOs being inducted," said Master Sgt. Sharlinda Warner, 8th TSC Central Tasking Office. "I never got this opportunity when I was promoted. I pinned on E-5 in front of my platoon and that was it, so this was something great. Even though they are just coming up in the ranks, it gives them a sense of being appreciated."

During the ceremony, guests watched a brief presentation of the history of the NCO. Soldiers

WHEELER ARMY AIRFIELD – Most days it can be difficult to find volunteers, even when the event is for a good cause, simply because people are so busy.

So when the 25th Combat Aviation Brigade recently had nearly 200 volunteers serving at various family readiness-sponsored events, a special effort was made to recognize each volunteer for his or her valued contribution.

The "Wings of Lightning" Brigade recognized 159 spouses and 29 Soldiers during a recognition ceremony at the 25th CAB's Memorial Room of Excellence, Friday. These volunteers contributed throughout the brigade and continue to make the brigade's family readiness groups (FRGs) successful.

Led by 25th CAB FRG advisors Robertta Cole and Kamalie Wagen, the event recognized volunteers for their work within the brigade and local community. Both advisors compiled a list of spouses and Soldiers when they began the two- to three-month process of planning the recognition ceremony.

Jessie Ruiz honored 159 family members and 29 Soldiers for volunteering throughout the brigade and supporting the family readiness group program.

"Our spouses do quite a lot in supporting our Soldiers, and our Soldiers do a lot of volunteering duties with the FRG," said Cole.

Awardees were honored for a myriad of accomplishments, which are distinguished by a five-tier system created by Col. Michael Lundy, commander, 25th CAB.

"The first time our spouses are recognized, they receive a bronze certificate;the next time they receive the silver; and the third time, gold," said Cole, explaining the system. "The higher-level awards are the Certificate of Appreciation for Patriotic Service, the Order of Our Lady Loreto, and the Commander's Award for Public Service. These are for people that have really contributed a lot to the family support structure of this brigade." At the ceremony, Lundy and the CAB's Command Sgt. Maj. Jessie Ruiz personally took the time to recognize each volunteer.

"We recognized everyone who did anything for the FRG, so it was everything from people who hold positions in the FRG to people who donated time at a fundraiser, provided a potluck for a single Soldier's dinner, and welcomed new spouses," said Cole.

Although they don't undertake their volunteer work for recognition or reward, volunteers enjoyed being recognized in front of their families, friends and fellow FRG members, according to the senior FRG advisor.

Additionally, Cole was also recognized for organizing her final FRG event before passing the reins over to Kamalie Wagen.

"I know a lot of our volunteers say that they don't want to be recognized or they don't do it for the recognition," Cole said with a smile, "(but) it's always nice for someone to pat you on the back and say 'thank you, good job."

with breakdowns in family functioning and communication, isolated families, families with significant mental health problems, and families that are not familiar with where to seek help.

According to Cole Weeks, Army Community Service (ACS), Family Advocacy Program (FAP) manager, child abuse and neglect can take many forms:

 Physical abuse can be described as excessive physical punishment that leaves bruising or marks, or has the potential to cause harm.

 Sexual abuse is inappropriate sexual contact.

3) Emotional abuse is a pattern of yelling, demeaning or humiliating.

4) Neglect can include depriving children of basic needs such as food, clothing, shelter and education. Lack of age-appropriate supervision can also be considered child neglect.

ACS' Family Advocacy Program offers ongoing classes on parenting, communication, stress and anger management, infant massage, infant care, and a boot camp for new dads. In addition, individualized home visits by a licensed behavioral health provider or a registered nurse for expectant parents or parents with children under the age of 5 is also available. For more information, call FAP at 655-4227 or at the new Tripler Army Medical Center (TAMC) FAP at 438-4497.

Most of all, I ask each and every one of you to report suspected child abuse or neglect immediately to the military police (Schofield Barracks 655-7114, Fort Shafter 438-7114, or dial 911).

You can also report incidents to the MPs via text message from your cell phone or the Web. To submit a text message tip through your personal cell phone:

(1) Type TIP730 and provide your tip information.

(2) Type "Crimes" (or the numbers 274637) in the "to" line and hit "Send."

To submit a tip via your computer:

Backed by a table full of free resources, information pamphlets, class lists, pocket emergency cards and experience, the team stands ready to assist, in any capacity, as parents pass through the doors of the Peterson CDC, here.

"Are you having any stressors?" Ewing asked a young mother bouncing an infant in her arms. "Is dad deployed?" Wong asked another with two children at her side, quickly providing a sympathetic ear for mom and stickers for the children. Ewing said one of the advantages of NPSP is that it allows the team to think outside the box and apply the NPSP services to the needs of individual parents or children.

Additionally, the NPSP team offers referrals, resource group workshops, playmorning and infant massage, augmented by a specialized staffed that is able to answer any question about parenting or children.

"Our strength is that we have different disciplines supporting our programs - nurses, counselors, social workers and therapists," Ewing said. "We know the concerns of parents and the challenges that military families face. Having a sym-pathetic ear and a few stickers for the children can sometimes make all the difference."

with transformation, and support Soldiers deployed to the global war on terrorism - among them 800 Army Reserve and National Guard personnel and 8,000 25th Infantry Division Soldiers supporting operations in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Additionally, Anderson played a significant role during periods of heightened environmental awareness and community involvement. He supported a population of 70,000 personnel.

Born to Doug and Janet Anderson at Toole Army Depot, Utah, Oct. 5, 1956, he was the eldest of five siblings. Anderson was loved and genuinely admired by all those who knew him. He married Wendy Giles, April 26, 1979. They had one daughter, Camille. A graduate of Utah State University, Anderson earned an Master of Business Administration from Brigham Young University, was a graduate of the Command and General Staff College and earned a second master's degree from the Naval War College.

He served in many distinguished assignments, among them at the Joint Readiness Training Center; at U.S. Army-Alaska; at the Office of the Chief of Legislative Liaison; and at U.S. Army Garrison-Hawaii.

Anderson was a field artillery officer in the Army for 25 years, receiving many awards and commendations. He was a survivor of the Sept. 11, 2001, attack at the Pentagon.

'Col. (Anderson) was a very gentle person, very kind and people-oriented," said Jack Wiers, former marketing director, Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation. "(He was) very ap-proachable, well-liked and respected."

After retiring as a colonel, Anderson pursued defense consulting in Washington, D.C., before ultimately managing Boyer Hill Military Housing at Hill Air Force Base, Utah, and consulting for Chevron Energy Solutions.

Time to consider future health care decisions is now

CAPT. ADAM HILL Chief, Legal Assistance Division

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS – The Legal Assistance Office of the 8th Theater Sustainment Command (TSC) and U.S. Army Garrison-Hawaii, along with other national, state and community organizations, is leading a massive effort to highlight the importance of advance health care decisionmaking – an effort that has culminated in the formal designation of April 16 as National Health Care Decisions Day (NHDD).

MHDD organizers are asking interested organizations and individuals throughout the country to help raise awareness about the importance of advance care planning on this special day, and throughout the year.

To help realize this goal, event organizers have created a Web site with information and tools for the public to talk about future health care decisions and execute written advance directives (health care powers of attorney and living wills) in accordance with applicable state laws. The Web site (nationalhealth-

The Web site (nationalhealthcaredecisionsday.org) also includes tips on how advocates can raise awareness in their communities.

Here are some of the ways to help this important cause:

First and foremost, lead by example. Be sure you have thoughtfully considered and made your own health care decisions known. Next, make sure everyone in your organization is informed about NHDD (including staff, board of directors, volunteers and others) and ask for their involvement to promote NHDD in your community.

Provide a link on your organizational Web site to nationalhealthcaredecisionsday.org. The site features a variety of information for the public and providers on advance care planning.

Encourage your state leaders to establish a state-sanctioned, secure online advance directive registry.

Only a small minority of Americans has executed an advance directive, although several states have engaged in awareness events and numerous organizations have devoted substantial time and money to improving education about advance health care planning. NHDD seeks to address this issue by focusing attention on advance health care planning from a variety of directions simultaneously.

For details about this important day, visit nationalhealth caredecisionsday.org. If you are active duty military, a family member of an active duty service member, or a military retiree and have questions about advance health care decision making, call the 8th TSC Legal Assistance Office at 655-8607.

Soldiers are finally ready to compete, Francis said.

"I kind of have mixed emotions. I am nervous, yet excited," Francis said, "but the nerves are good ... because if you aren't nervous, you get a little cocky, and I want (the team members) to be humble in everything that they do." "As long as they remain humble and open minded, and always ready to learn and willing to learn, they will excel," Francis continued. "I have nothing but confidence in my team this year."

Francis also said the competition will help prepare Soldiers for life after the military and help them develop a skill they enjoy. "Honestly, the best part of my job is when I'm standing in the (dining facility) and I hand a Soldier a plate of food and they smile and I know that they enjoyed it," said Sgt. Monique Sorrell, team captain and food service specialist with U.S. Army-Pacific Special Troops Battalion. "And I also enjoy being able to learn as much as I can for the civilian aspect of it."

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS – "Repeat after me," said Special Olympics athlete Kimo Costa. "Let me win." "Let me win," said additional athletes.

"But if I cannot win, let me be brave in the attempt," continued Costa.

An echo came from the crowd, followed by an outpouring of cheers kicking off the 2009 Special Olympics-Hawaii (SOHI) Central Honolulu and Windward Track and Field Meet at Stoneman Stadium, here, Saturday.

Twenty-four teams, consisting of more than 170 participants in two age categories then began track and field events, including the long jump, softball throw and various running competitions. Each competition showcased the talents of the athletes to the large crowd of supporters.

Numerous volunteers, including more than 50 Soldiers from the 25th Infantry Division (ID) rear detachment, 130th Engineer Battalion and 45th Sustainment Brigade aided the organization to make sure the event ran smoothly.

Finding volunteers was an easy task according to Master Sgt. Morgan Moore of 25th ID's 3rd Infantry Brigade Combat Team rear detachment. "The Soldiers really came together to show their support," said Moore, See the athletes compete during the upcoming Special Olympics events:

"It was an experience I will never forget, and the reason I continue to be involved with this organization," said Moore. Soldiers recorded times of runners and urged walkers across the finish line, while cheering on participants after each completed the course.

"Helping out at this event is the right thing to do," said Pfc. Jesse Jones, 84th Engineer Battalion. "The (participants) have so much heart."

"We can learn something from them," added Jones. Special Olympics ly, more than two million athletes around the world benefit from participation in Special Olympics.

SOHI offers year-round sports training and athletic competition for children and adults. More than 1,500 athletes from around the state currently participate in the program. Special Olympics athletes train to compete in local, regional and national competitions. With each meet, they learn to win and lose and continually strive to do their best – but most of all, they inspire those around them.

"I applaud all of the effort and training it took to get you here to the track and field championship," said Army Athlete of the Year Capt. Shawn Dodge, 732nd Military Intelligence Battalion, to the participants. "We all have a gift, and you have been given an incredible opportunity today to share your gift." COMMUNITY HAWAII ARMY WEEKLY APRIL 10, 2009 | B-3 JROTC cadets hone leadership skills during spring break

Local high schools take part in annual event

U.S. ARMY GARRISON-HAWAII Public Affairs Offic

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS - More than 200 cadets represented the Army and Air Force Junior Reserve Officers Training Corps (JROTC) at the 38th Annual JROTC Cadet Leadership Challenge (JCLC) held March 26-Âpril 2, here, at Area X.

Sixteen high schools throughout the state of Hawaii participated in the JCLC during the students' spring break.

Army instructors taught cadet leaders lessons, which they then applied in their respective groups. All cadets were mixed into four training groups, and each cadet was challenged mentally and physically to do his or her best.

The spring camp has three main objectives, to: allow cadets to practice leadership and citizenship skills, provide an opportunity for cadets to participate in adventure training and, lastly, have fun.

During the leadership challenges, participating cadets were required to abide by "CADET" values: courage, adaptability, discipline, enthusiasm and teamwork. Motivations or "team cheers" were also part of the criteria.

Army instructors and their assistants helped set up a rope bridge while other cadets constructed hip rappel seats. Teams worked to help each cadet hook to the rope bridge, monkey crawl across the bridge, and then unhook each other on the opposite side.

"I enjoyed this event because it was a fun experience. The whole team participated, and everyone motivated each other," said Cadet Raylene Kealoha, Nanakuli High School, who was grateful to have had the chance to experience something as exciting as the camp. At the rappel site, located at the East Range, cadets rappelled off the side of a 30-foot cliff using commercial seats.

Many of the cadets were nervous and excited all at the same time, and many experienced an adrenaline rush, said instructor retired Lt. Col. Don
