Community shows support for child neglect and abuse prevention programs

HONOLULU – Eli Joor, 8, held the shiny blue metallic pinwheel in his hands and carefully placed it onto the lawn of the State Capitol building here, Monday. Numerous other community volunteers followed suit. For more information about the Pinwheels for Prevention program or about child abuse prevention programs and activities throughout the year, call Prevent Child Abuse Hawaii at 951-0200 or go to preventchildabuse hawaii.org.

"This is my third year doing this," said Joor. "I'm helping kids like me." More than 5,000 pinwheels graced the lawn, representing the number of phone calls received each year by The Parent Line, a confidential statewide hotline that offers support and information to parents, caregivers and professionals regarding issues of child abuse and neglect.

"We ask the community to come out with signs supporting child abuse and neglect prevention programs and legislation," said Chet Akessa, Pinwheels for Prevention volunteer chairperson. "Our profound wish is that one day there is no need for a child abuse prevention rally because there will be no abused children."

The annual event is part of a monthlong series of events funded by the State Department of Health to observe April as Child Abuse Prevention Month.

Army Hawaii gives thanks to volunteers

Volunteer Appreciation Week honors commitment of selfless individuals

Staff Writer SCHOFIELD BARRACKS - More than 25 community volunteers, senior spouses and garrison leadership rallied together Monday morning to kick off the U.S. Army Garrison-Hawaii (USAG-HI) Volunteer Appreciation Week activities with a special breakfast and shopping event at the Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) Main Exchange, here. In this instance, the volunteers weren't here to give, but instead, to receive "thanks" in the form of a VIP shopping spree, giveaways and prizes at the post exchange (PX). As the group enjoyed breakfast, Tracy Clark, Army Community Service (ACS), Army Volunteer Corps coordinator, announced the activities that would take place to honor volunteers this week. "A free movie, bowling, a 'Price is Right' breakfast event, with an opportunity to win a two-night stay at the Pililaau Army Recreation Center and discount shopping (are available)," she announced, receiving cheers from the crowd. POHAHULOA TRAINING AREA, Hawaii – Soldiers from the 524th Combat Service Support Battalion (CSSB) returned to Pohakuloa Training Area (PTA) this month to hone their warfighting capabilities for future deployments.

"You train as you fight," said Lt. Col. Leona Knight, commander, 524th CSSB. "You can't be prepared for combat if you don't train for it, and we have simulated the situations many of the Soldiers can face in combat." Beginning April 3, Soldiers arrived on the Big Island to improve upon their

Garrison adds school crossing guards

LT. COL. THOMAS DENZLER Director, Directorate of Emergency Services

DES Straight Talk

The U.S. Army Garrison-Hawaii (USAG-HI) and Directorate of Emergency Services (DES) are implementing initiatives in response to concerns recently presented by the USAG-HI Army Family Action Plan (AFAP) committee.

To enhance our children's safety walking to and around Schofield schools, additional crossing guards will be present daily to augment those already provided by Solomon and Hale Kula Elementary Schools. Drivers should abide with crossing guards' directions and always keep an eye open for children walking to and from school.

Parents are reminded that children younger than 10 years of age cannot be left unsupervised at bus stops or walk to school alone.

Also, additional law enforcement officers will be trained to augment animal control officers to help catch stray animals. Animal control officers primarily work daytime hours, seven days a week

Additionally, unit leadership is getting involved in making sure Soldiers spay/neuter their animals and dissuade pet abandonment upon PCS (permanent changes of station), deployment, etc.

Other hot topics

•Animal Control. Community members are asked to keep their pets under control at all times. Incidents of dog bites have occurred because younger family members have been unable to control dogs while walking them.

Residents are also directed to refrain from feeding wild animals. Feeding stray cats will increase their population and dissuade them from preying on rodents. Feeding wild pigs will encourage them to return to our communities and pose as a possible danger.

•Game Console Thefts (e.g. X-Box). Our communities have experienced an increase in the theft of game consoles and video games, primarily from unlocked residences. We suspect these stolen items are taken to off-post commercial establishments that allow sales or trade-ins. Aside from locking your residence, protect your property by recording your system's serial number (or have it engraved by the Community Relations Office, 655-8405). This recently led to the return of one system to its owner and some solid investigative leads.

•Schofield Barracks "Flasher" Apprehended. A family member was apprehended, April 16, for entering a USAG-HI facility and exposing himself. A subsequent investigation determined this individual was also responsible for three similar cases in January, and for indecently assaulting a female jogger in March.

Thanks to those individuals who aided in apprehending this subject. This illustrates an involved community can

Month of the Military Child Military keiki learn to roll with punches

LEXIE TABA Army News Service

WIESBADEN, Germany -The life of a military child can be hard, but some people underestimate how hard being constantly uprooted and always having to pack up and leave right when a young person finally feels a sense of belonging really is.

Moving away is always hard, but even harder is moving in - into a new house, a new school and a new life.

Although students at military schools are welcoming and understanding, they see youths moving in and out all the time. Being the new kid at a military school is not a big deal or a novelty.

This fact means that new students must reach out and put forth effort to make friends, which is always difficult, especially for shy people who are missing their old school and friends.

Getting used to the way a school and community work may also be difficult. Every school has slightly different rules, classes and ways of doing things.

Credits from a previous school may not transfer to a new school. There may be different classes than what a student was taking before the move, and the class schedules may be different.

If a family moves overseas, getting used to the country's language and customs is also

Luckily, the military is great at providing things to make transitions easier. Activities, trips and places dedicated to young people are always planned.

The sense of family in a military community is also very helpful. Getting involved in groups is a way to share experiences and stories, make new friends and help the community Meeting new people can be difficult and nerve-wracking, but once military students get past the awkward meeting process and really start to get to know other people, they can really learn interesting things.

The more people military students meet, the more chances they have of finding a lifelong friend or an interesting person they thought they would have never met normally. Getting to see new places is also a benefit of being a military child, especially if the child lives overseas.

Living in Europe, vacations to other countries and to see places and things many people have only read or heard about are easy.

Even though being a military child can be difficult and sometimes upsetting, many things make life better – things that maybe some have not thought of before as being a good thing.

Military children just have to open their eyes, and take in all of the things that make them happy.

F STATEPS in FAITH Loneliness is a battle fought, won with support groups

CHAPLAIN (CAPT.) NATHAN P. MCLEAN Deputy Community Chaplain, Fort Shafter Community

There is, within our military culture, a battle taking place. This battle, however, is not only being fought where you might expect.

This battle is being fought in the trenches of our very homes, barracks and playgrounds. It is the difficult work of battling domestic loneliness.

Loneliness is a natural response to being separated from the one you love. Its presence is not bad or unfitting within our families. Rather, it is a healthy response to separation and loss.

Children ought to miss their father when he is not at home. Husbands should miss their wives when the wives are deployed. To be lonely is to be human in its fullest sense.

I am convinced the type of loneliness that manages and works through pain of separation in healthy ways is a good thing to have in our communities.

The sort of loneliness, however, that retreats from the reality of separation and refuses to embrace the truth that a loved one is gone is not healthy. It is not an easy task to face the silent hill of loneliness, but it is an essential part of life.

Sadly, too, many people allow lonliness to take them over. They seek new and unhealthy fixes to their pain.

Some forge ahead with unnecessary shopping sprees, endless movies, or even through relationships outside of their marriage covenant.

Some keep pushing more and more work into the lonely spots of their life, and at the end of their loneliness, they are left with only more challenges and heartbreak.

I find it encour-Mclean

Apostle Paul said, of the many difficult circumstances he endured for the sake of his calling, "I have learned to find resources in myself whatever my circumstances. I know what it is to be brought low, and I know what it is to have plenty. I have been very thoroughly initiated into the human lot with all its ups and downs fullness and hunger, plenty and want. I have strength for anything through him who gives me power"hilippians 4:11-13). The Scripture teaches that our deepest pain can help us to reshape our lives for the better. The healthiest people I meet in the military are not those who never have to face tough times. Rather, they are people who, when they struggle, embrace their pain. That's correct, I said embrace their pain.

They embrace it by accepting the truth of their new reality and then they get involved. They work to not be isolated in their loneliness by being actively engaged in small support groups in the community.

They are not without scars or wounds or heartache, but they are healthy because they refuse to be undone by their wounds. Instead, they are active agents working to be a part of the solution.

Are you exhausted from loneliness? Begin winning the battle by making a decision today that you will seek out others. From my experience, finding strength within ourselves, from within others, and in our community of faith are strong weapons in the battle you face.

Do not underestimate the opportunities you have in this season of your life. which you may never have again. Invest your time wisely and healthily.

You just may look back one day and see how much you have grown, and without a doubt, the rest you get will be healing.

aging that in the Scripture, many strong believers struggled with separation and loneliness

Working dogs play important part in the fight

FORWARD OPERATING BASE BERN-STEIN, TUZ, Iraq – Staff Sgt. Conan Thomas and his Army "battle buddy," Sgt. 1st Class Britt, have been working together for nearly two years.

Theirs is not your run-of-the-mill partnership, though. Britt has never said a word to Thomas, but the rapport between the two is unmistakable.

Thomas makes sure that Britt gets paid when he's done his job, and Britt knows that Thomas will always be there for him.

There's a mutual trust in their relationship; each knows the other won't let him down.

"It took a year and a half to get him to this point," said Thomas, kneeling down to pet his German Shepherd, "a year and a half for Britt and I to have this outstanding relationship."

Thomas and Britt are assigned to the 148th Military Police Detachment and attached to the 3rd Infantry Brigade Combat Team, 25th Infantry Division, during their deployment.

Thomas, a member of the Military Police Corps, went to a special military school to become a dog handler.

Britt is what's known as a PEDD, a patrol/explosive detection dog. That means he can be used for intimidation purposes and sniffing out anything from detonation cord to bulk explosives.

Britt is definitely intimidating, according to Pfc. James Frey, who volunteered to be the bad guy or criminal during an April 8 training session with Thomas and Britt. The session entailed Frey running away when he was told to stay put and then letting the military working dog (MWD) pounce on him to stop his flight.

Frey attended a class beforehand on how to behave so his actions would train the MWD.

"I didn't get hurt, so it was awesome," said Frey. "He's very powerful.

"I did this last week with a friend of mine who's a lot smaller than me," Frey continued, "and the dog was really blasting him around."

His snout covered with a thick, leather muzzle, Britt was only able to knock Frey down and bark menacingly.

Part of the instruction Frey had received from Thomas was to hit the dirt and curl into a ball as soon as Britt bumped him. That wasn't a problem, considering Frey only outweighed the dog by about 40 pounds.

"Britt is trained on a bite sleeve, but we like to use a whole bite suit just for the safety of the decoy. Today we used a muzzle because we don't have all the proper training equipment at Forward Operating Base Bernstein," said Thomas.

"How the decoy [Frey] acts when he goes down is important to make the training good for the dog. The drive for the dog is the bite, and he can't bite without us having at least a bite sleeve," said Thomas.

Thomas can only train Britt on the bite sleeve every 10 days or so; otherwise Britt will get frustrated by not "winning," and he may start to lose the motivation to do what he's trained to do.

Staff Sgt. Conan Thomas, military working dog (MWD) handler, 148th Military Police Detatchment, trains his MWD, Sgt. 1st Class Britt at Forward Operating Base Bernstein, April 8. Britt is chasing after a specially-trained Soldier who Thomas has indicated is a threat.

"It's just like anything else," said Spc. Jason David, also an MWD handler at FOB Bernstein. "If you don't train with it, you'll lose it."

David's dog, Sgt. Bandit, is trained specifically for detecting explosives. He's what's known as a specialized search dog. The 5-year-old English Springer Spaniel can unearth a hidden bullet or discover the faintest trace of a chemical used in bombs.

During training, Bandit easily tracked down five pounds of C4 explosives that David had carefully hidden under a trash can. "I use what's called a 'trigger' for him. When he wears his vest, he knows it's time to work," explained David.

After Bandit finds what he's looking for during training, he gets to play catch with a neon-colored tennis ball.

"The playing afterward is like the paycheck for the dog; that's what makes them want to work," said Thomas.

Although they have two very different MWDs, both Thomas and David use special verbal and visual commands to let their dogs know what to do next.

"Not only do you have to trust your dog, but he has to trust you as well," said David.

When either of the dogs has to do his job, everything is put on the record. In fact, Thomas and David even keep detailed logs of training. Without training records, the dogs' findings may not be admissible in court.

"We don't have a full scent kit," said David. With the kit, the training could be even more thorough. Since there are different kinds of explosives used in Iraq than stateside, the MWD handlers need a theater-specific scent kit to fully train the dogs for their mission here.

Even without all the training aids that bigger bases are well-stocked with, FOB Bernstein working dogs and their handlers are doing everything they can to stay current on training.

"German Shepherds and spaniels are known for their intelligence. That's why we use these dogs," said David. "They have the smarts to go and find what we need them to find."

84th Engineers help enable Iraqi cultural preservation

STAFF SGT. ARMOND CURET Personal Security Detachment, 84th Engineer Battalion

MOSUL, Iraq – The Soldiers of the 84th Engineer Battalion's Personal Security Detachment (PSD) have gone on more than 75 combat-related patrols and were grateful to be able to escape their normal battle rhythm and partake in a mission that was both rewarding, and in a way, peacefully relaxing.

After a long rough week packed with endless hours of driving and responding to emergency calls throughout Iraq's dry and barren desert landscape, the PSD found itself amidst a luscious haven of greenery and picturesque rolling hills, April 6.

The 84th Eng. Bn. entered into a unique partnership with the Provincial Reconstruction Team (PRT) aimed at preserving Ninewa's unique cultural heritage, a collection of sites spanning civilizations and faiths.

The partnership's common goal is to protect these sites from further degradation and help establish them as the foundation for a tourist economy.

The PSD escorted and provided safeguard to the PRT and the 84th Eng. Bn. commander (joined by senior officials of the United Nations Educational and Scientific Organization, or UNESCO) as they visited two unique sights in Ninewa's Shaikhan district.

The shrine, nestled in a valley high in the mountains, is part of the Yezidi faith, which gives reverence for all living things. The valley is filled with fruit, olive trees and other plant life.

The partnership's goal is to have the shrine designated as a UNESCO World Heritage site, which will help protect it against threats, including development, and make raising funds for its preservation easier.

Regardless of the mission, the Soldiers of PSD prepare and conduct themselves with a sense of pride. Though certain missions prove taxing on the team, the opportunity to get out of the driver's seat and escape the jolts from the bumpy and dangerous roads of Iraq's third largest city, Mosul, was warmly welcomed by all the Soldiers.

The sites visited in the Ninewa province are home to a fabulous tapestry of faiths and cultures. The PSD was delighted to be in partnership with its colleagues from the U.S. Department of State in safeguarding lives and ancient heritage.

524th CSSB: Skills augmented at PTA

Spc. Michael Sullivan, a quartermaster with the 540th Quartermaster (QM) Company, values the training as an opportunity to learn skills outside of his military occupation specialty. The skills can benefit him downrange in areas like Iraq or Afghanistan.

"When you are in Iraq, it's close quarter combat that the enemy likes to hide in," Sullivan said, "so we need this training because you never know what you could be faced with."

Sullivan's teams moved into a two-story building and practiced room -clearing techniques with enemy combatants hiding around many corners waiting to ambush them.

"We don't do this kind of training that often, so this is an excellent opportunity to be familiar with situations that could possibly happen," Sullivan said.

The training simulated many conditions in which the service support Soldiers will operate during a deployment. Each morning, vehicles stage outside of gates, team leaders brief their squads, and they practice the many essential tasks to better themselves in combat. "Every Soldier out here is our priority," said 2nd Lt. Janelle Jones, 540th QM Co. "The techniques of the enemy are changing. We no longer fight the enemy from a distance anymore, so we're training in house-to-house operations to meet the enemy face-to-face."

Although service support Soldiers do not routinely find themselves in front of the enemy, the unit is taking the time to make sure they know what to do in combat.

"Knowing what to do in the heat of battle is very important," Sullivan said. "When the situation becomes chaotic, Soldiers will have to rely on their training. The skills we are learning here will make that happen."

The 524th CSSB is wrapping up its training May 1, but already the command sees results from the training since arriving on the island a few weeks ago.

"The Soldiers have performed fantastically; there's no better way to say it," Knight said. "Every Soldier here has put forth their best effort and come to each part of the training with a great attitude and ready to learn. Every Soldier has become even better, and we've not only honed their individual skills, but also our collective skills as well."

kids these days, so I want to let you all know the value of reading. It can open doors for you."

During the visit, Mason read The Enormous Carrot to a class of kindergartners. The book was about teamwork, and Mason emphasized the importance of working together as a unit to get a job done.

"If a lot of people get together, things can happen," Mason said to the students. "You all can do many things, but if you work as a team, you all can accomplish even greater things." Mason also read Is There Really a Human

Mason also read Is There Really a Human Race? to a second and third grade class. The book uses a play on the word "race" and talks about taking "one's" time and "trying one's best, instead of beating the rest."

School Principal Sherrylyn Yamada said the students receive special visits throughout the school year and are happy to have any community leader take the time to read to them.

"We love visits like this," Yamada said. "These visits are great because they encourage children to read and make it a part of their daily lives."

Yamada added that the school promotes reading every day to build lifelong learning, which she said can be gained through opening a book.

"Reading is an important thing year-round," Yamada emphasized. "It's great to see that Maj. Gen. Mason shares that same value with us. It makes a big difference to the students to have someone encourage that view."

The school year may be coming to a close for the students of Webling Elementary, but the school principal said guest speakers are still welcome to visit the school to read to children and share words of wisdom.

Directorate of Public Works leader named best support executive

IMCOM recognizes local environmental leader for his accomplishments

KYLE FORD Assistant Editor

WHEELER ARMY AIRFIELD – Recently, U.S. Army Garrison-Hawaii (USAG-HI) earned several environmental and conservation awards. However, the programs that garnered the recognition didn't happen in a vacuum. In fact, they had to be nurtured like seedlings in a garden.

The gardener is Alvin Char, chief, Environmental Division, Directorate of Public Works (DPW), who was named DPW Support Executive of the Year at the Headquarters Installation Management Command (IMCOM) DPW Awards Program, April 7.

The IMCOM program recognizes individuals and organizations that demonstrate excellence in management and execution of the Army public works and real property maintenance missions.

As an environmental manager, Char is respected as a leader and professional by his peers, employees and the Army community. He has developed a highly skilled and diverse staff of professional engineers, biologists, archeologists and environmental protection specialists – all with a wide range of experience, skills and abilities – and transformed them into an intensely motivated team focused on the critical task of environmental protection.

"I've worked for Alvin for 13 years, and he expects a lot," said Peter Yuh Jr., DPW conservation branch chief. "He's an exceptional manager in terms of support of his leaders."

Through Char's leadership, USAG-HI's environmental program excels in putting together and using cutting-edge initiatives to operate in the delicate and fragile environment of Hawaii.

Char manages the industrial activities performed by the 25th Infantry Division, to include drinking water, air pollution, wastewater, hazardous waste, pollution prevention, cleanup sites, and more than 165,000 acres containing more than 100 species of endangered plants and animals.

Char has been tending garden at the Environmental Division since 1979.

"I've seen the program grow from a staff of four people to 22 civilian workers and more than 100 contractors," Char said.

The maturation of programs that strive to satisfy both Army and environmental requirements makes Char happy to come to work every day.

"When I began, the environmental program was a training disabler," Char said. "If there were issues with the environment and training ... the environment won. This did not win friends with commanders of units who needed to perform training and certifications."

The current program is a training enabler, which has since grown to a program that mitigates and improves environmental protections without impacting training.

He's made strides through the environmental compliance officer (ECO) program, which requires each unit down to the company level to designate an ECO and alternate ECO. More than 700 ECOs are provided one week of training by DPW each year.

Additionally, Char has been the moving force behind implementing a pollution prevention and recycling program. The "recycling miracle" was started two years ago by creating a recycling program manager position and expanding the current recycling contract.

Recycling operations include a recycling center, a curbside collection program, recycling construction debris, recycling requests over the Intranet, sludge recycling from the Schofield Barracks Wastewater Plant, and aggressive grassroots recycling.

Because the Army owns so much land in Hawaii, the public has heightened interest in what the Army does on that land, Char said.

"The Army recognizes that the cost of doing business is to take care of the land and environment under its responsibility," said Char.

He added that Army Hawaii wants to be a good neighbor and a good steward of the environment.

His programs have significantly reduced costs and improved customer service.

"I don't think people realize how tough his job is," said co-worker Rhonda Suzuki, chief, Environmental Complainace, Pollution, Prevention, Restoration Branch, DPW Environmental Division.

It's a tough balance between military training, building and keeping environmental stewardship, agreed Yuh.

"He has a tough job of balance and see if we 'can do," Yuh said. "When environmental concerns block a course of action, such as training, it's (Char's) job to get us to find a way to make it happen. He's a 'can do' man."

Char, an avid outdoorsman, is proud that his work will help preserve and protect the environment for future generations.

"I'm doing what I wanted to do," Char said. "Working for the Army, there is always something new ... there's never a dull moment."

While the award is great, Char said he gets the most satisfaction out of helping the Army accomplish its mission.

"We're here to find a way to help the Army do its job," Char said.

the garrison's efforts to recognize individuals who devote their time to support Army Soldiers and families.

Col. Matthew Margotta, commander, USAG-HI, said the sacrifices and efforts of our volunteers need to be recognized beyond the annual garrison ceremony.

"Army families, Army spouses, Army Soldiers, have always come forward to volunteer their time and effort in support of our families and communities. Because the Army provides more services to our Soldiers and families than ever before, we have to rely on volunteers," said Margotta.

Prior to the shopping event, Lisa McCaffrey, senior family readiness group advisor, 2nd Stryker Brigade Combat Team, and a volunteer, spoke to the group, thanking them for their service. She reflected on volunteerism and the 2009 theme for the week, "Volunteer to Change the World."

"Most of us that volunteer love to be the givers, not the receivers," McCaffrey said. "Volunteerism is a love made visible and it changes lives, it changes communities, and it can change the world. And you all have done that," McCaffrey continued. "I hope you enjoy all Left — Tracy Clark (left), Army Volunteer Corps coordinator, hands a button to volunteer Mary Ward at U.S. Army Garrison-Hawaii's Volunteer Appreciation Week kick off event.

these opportunities this week." Prizes were drawn, and true to volunteerism, no one went home empty handed.

Just before the AAFES doors opened, Clark called out, "And, don't forget to pick up a button." Clark reminded the volunteers to proudly display their volunteer button all week so community members can identify them and say "thanks."

The week's activities came to a close at the annual Volunteer Recognition Ceremony, Thursday evening, at the Hale Ikena, Fort Shafter.

The events, organized by ACS, Clark and senior spouses, were sponsored by AAFES and the Defense Commissary Agency (DeCA).

FMWR pools prepared to make a splash this summer

NEWS

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS – Opportunities for swimming on the island of Oahu are plentiful whether at the beach or at one of the four Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation (FMWR) swimming pools available to residents of U.S. Army Garrison-Hawaii (USAG-HI) communities and Army families stationed here.

Swimmers young and old, Soldiers or civilians, can enjoy a variety of amenities at all the facilities with the opening of Aliamanu Military Reservation (AMR) pool, May 25, and the Helemano Military Reservation (HMR) pool, May 26.

The AMR and HMR facilities add to the year-round services already offered at the Tripler Army Medical Center (TAMC) and the Richardson, Schofield Barracks pools.

Class schedules, operating hours, pool rules and pass fee information for all Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation facilities are listed at www.mwrarmyhawaii.com.

"See this crowd here today?" said Momi Smith, FMWR, aquatics director, pointing to a crowd of toddlers in the Richardson wading pool. "This is nothing compared to a hot summer day."

Smith says the pools are ready for the peak "summer" months and points out a few new safety requirements, upgrades and additions swimmers may see at the pool facilities this year.

One major safety upgrade, as required by the Virginia Graeme Baker (VGB) Act, was the installation of anti-entrapment drain covers at all facilities. According to Smith, all FMWR Hawaii pools are now in compliance with the VGB Act, which protects children from life-threatening injuries and deaths from dangerous pool and spa drains.

Richardson Pool

Richardson Pool is open year-round. Looking out across the 103-meter long, 25-meter wide body of water, every corner is busy with water activities at any hour of the day and any time of the year. Towering above it all is one of its ha newest amenities, a 146-foot long spiral po slide.

Smith said the new slide is safer with anti-slip stairs and provides a wider stairway split into two levels, for an easier climb to the top, especially for smaller children.

For Soldiers, the facility was one of the first to receive a Shallow Water Egress Trainer (SWET). Training with the device is the next step in familiarizing Soldiers with the difficulties and hazards of escaping from an overturned vehicle in shallow water.

The Richardson pool is the largest in the Department of Defense and offers 25- and 50-meter lap lanes, a one-meter diving board, two three-meter diving boards, a five-meter dive platform and a hard top gazebo area with gas grills for pool party rentals.

An 18-inch deep children's wading pool is available for nonswimmers and children ages 5 and younger.

Tripler Army Medical Facility Pool

Also open year-round, the TAMC facility will start the high season with a resurfaced children's wading pool.

Although the wading pool is currently closed, "plaster repairs are in the works," Smith said, and she expects the wading pool to reopen in June.

"Toddlers love the TAMC wading pool because it graduates in depth from 0- to 12-inches deep in the center," she said, "like a beach."

She also revealed that the facility will be installing a new 6-foot slide. The

Community center pool opens at Fort Shafter

AMY L. BUGALA

Staff Writer FORT SHAFTER – Residents of Army Hawaii Family Housing (AHFH)

have a new amenity to enjoy here. A 25-meter pool servicing AHFH residents garrison-wide opened recently at the 1st Lt. Jonathan Brostrom Community Center, Fort Shafter.

"We're excited to have our first aquatics facility open," said Lisa Reese, AHFH director of property management. "It's another great amenity we can offer, and it's great to see so many of our families enjoying it." The new facility features a 25-meter lap pool, splash park and children's sand pool. Families also can enjoy spectacular views of Pearl Harbor from the pool deck areas.

Unlike Army facilities, such as the pools provided by Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation (FMWR), the 1st Lt. Brostrom Community Center was constructed, and is operated, maintained and supported solely by funds provided through AHFH residents and not U.S. Army Garrison-

TAMC community also has access to a hard top gazebo area with gas grills for pool party rentals.

Military Reservation Pools

The AMR and HMR pools are smaller, seasonal facilities open May-October. Smith is currently working to offer some convenience upgrades at both facilities to include 20-by-20 foot tents and gas grills for pool party renters.

"This will give our communities at both these facilities a large, shaded area for children and family parties," said Smith. She explains that permanent tents are not in those locations due to the winds. Ultimately, Smith would like to see the facilities get permanent gazebo areas.

Because HMR's pool depth starts at 5-feet deep, the aquatics staff provides a teaching platform in the water to reduce the depth to approximately Hawaii (USAG-HI). Therefore, current policies allow only AHFH residents and their family members (from any garrison installation) to use the pool.

"The community centers, to include the 1st Lt. Brostrom pool, are provided as a benefit and incentive to live in AHFH provided housing," explained Col. Matthew Margotta, commander, USAG-HI.

And in addition, for Soldiers and families who live off-post, "there are facilities that mirror the ones provided by AHFH for their use - that are supported by the Army."

In the southern community, FMWR offers a pool at Aliamanu Military Reservation and Tripler Army Medical Center and in Wakiki there is a pool at the Hale Koa Hotel.

The 1st Lt. Brostrom pool is open during the summer from 11 a.m.-7 p.m., Tuesday-Sunday. The pool is closed Mondays.

A pass is required for entry and can be obtained at the center. For more information about AHFH go to www.armyhawaiifamilyhousing.com.

two-and-a-half feet.

"The platform is especially useful during the 'Learn to Swim' classes, making it easier for the children," Smith said.

HMR also has a children's wading pool, but AMR does not due to space limitations. However, children ages 5 and younger are allowed in the pool with a life jacket on and accompanied by parents.

Hale Koa Pool

The Hale Koa Hotel, located directly on Waikiki Beach, is an Armed Forces Recreation Center that boasts three swimming pools and is open to anyone with a valid military ID.

All FMWR facilities are handicap accessible and offer a variety of classes for all ages. Residents are encouraged to get ready to make a splash, swim some laps, enjoy water aerobics, or learn to swim at these facilities this summer.

"At New Parent Support, we aim to prevent child abuse through education," said Homont. "Events like this impact the whole community by bringing this issue to their attention."

"It's everyone working together to prevent child abuse by being aware," Homont continued, adding that prevention information is readily available to the community.

More than 3.5 million reports were made to Child Protective Services concerning the safety and well-being of approximately 6 million children in the U.S. in 2006, according to Prevent Child Abuse America. The reports said an estimated 905,000 children are victims of child abuse and neglect.

Prevent Child Abuse Hawaii, the Hawaii Chapter of Prevent Child Abuse America, and the Child Abuse Prevention Planning Council sponsored the Pinwheels for Prevention Project.

The Waianae Military Civilian Advisory Council (WMCAC) was one of several organizations Wolff formed during his command in the late-70s, to foster positive relations among Hawaii's Army, local and native Hawaiian communities.

Born May 24, 1925, in Cologne, Germany, Wolff's family relocated to the U.S. in 1939 to escape the harsh rule of the Nazi Party.

After the outbreak of World War II, Wolff tried to enlist in the Army, but was rejected as an "enemy alien." Ironically, the Army drafted him in 1943.

Wolff served in the Pacific Theater. During the struggle on Luzon, when he was a private first class, he earned the Silver Star for Gallantry in Action.

In January 1945, while assigned to the Alamo Scouts, an all-volunteer commando unit, Wolff participated in a daring raid on a Japanese prisoner of war (POW) camp in the Philippines. The Alamo Scouts rescued 511 American POWs. For his leadership and bravery during the raid, Wolff earned a battlefield commission to second lieutenant.

He later earned a second Silver Star for actions during the Korean War, when he commanded two companies and a battalion in combat.

Staff Writer SCHOFIELD BARRACKS - "When is my interview?" 10-year-old Aaron Washington eagerly inquired, repeatedly.

The Solomon Elementary School fourth grader wanted to make certain he would be on-the-record concerning his views about Earth Day. He came prepared to share his environmental wisdom.

Âs Washington and his friends patrolled the second annual Earthday Festival at the Kalakaua community center, here, Sunday, their youth was a central component of the event.

Sponsored by Army Hawaii Family Housing (AHFH), the Earthday Festival kicked off "Green Movement," a campaign to increase environmental awareness with young people.

"Of course, change comes with generations: getting younger generations in early and helping them understand what change is about, what environmental responsibility is about, and using kids as advocates of change," said Claire Ridding-Johnston, AHFH, project director, emphasizing the role Washington's generation plays in the future of the movement.

Free plants and dozens of conservation and environmental exhibits rimmed the site with children, education and the Month of the Military Child as predominant themes of the day.

More than two dozen displays offered insights and educational opportunities for children and adults concerning garrison conservation initiatives. Recycling, water conservation, soil management and biodegradable household products were highlighted. Farmers and landscapers showcased native and locally grown plants, fruits and vegetables, and they provided tips to home gardeners. The exhibits combined with a variety of youthfocused activities, such as Tshirt and face paintings, inflatable jumpy castles, dra-matic storytellers and plenty of keiki food were more than Washington and his friends engaged for a sunny after-serve and take care of our environment," Washington said, when he was asked about the significance of the day.

Washington's moment had arrived, although he did need to have a friend hold his shave ice during his media encounter.

Eighth grader, Nikki Stuart, 13, from Mililani Mauka Middle School wanted to immediately share some of her newfound knowledge with her parents, and set some new standards for herself.

"I would tell (my parents) to conserve water because we use much more water than we should. After today, I will take shorter showers because I take them too long," Stuart said.

The Earth Day movement evolved as a natural extension of Arbor Day. In the spirit of Arbor Day,

"It all starts with trying to change a generation of young kids. They're our future," said Margotta. "That's the way it is in our household.

Honolulu and concerned citizens to participate in the Earth Day 2009 clean up entitled "Mauka to Makai Connection to the Ala Wai."

Also, more than 60 volunteers participated to clean up the beach and berm area of the Corps' Pacific Regional Visitor Center, Fort DeRussy, April 11. Punahou High School Junior ROTC, Cub Scouts Pack 464 in Mililani, the Corps of Engineers, and family and community members volunteered.

"I feel good about doing this," said Col. Robert Takao, commander, JROTC Punahou H.S. "Our program has been doing this for several years now. It's a very worthwhile endeavor. It helps our students understand how fragile our environment is and how important it is for our students to understand their responsibility to protect the environment."

These sentiments were echoed by Pack 464 leader Tanya Castro.

"I'm teaching the Cub Scouts that we have to take care of the planet so it can take care of us," Castro said. "Our motto is to help and serve. I hope that the Cub Scouts can be role models for us so that we can all take care of the aina (land).'

"I was happy to join the Earth Day volunteers. We gathered a significant amount of trash from the beach and berm area at Fort DeRussy," said Steve Yamamoto, chief, Civil Works Technical Branch, Honolulu District. "Our Park Rangers, Angela Jones and John Mueller, did a super job in organizing and coordinating this event."

The City and County of Honolulu's Department of Environmental Services also sponsored an Earth Day "Mauka to Makai Environmental Expo" at the Waikiki Aquarium. Participants included many organizations interested in keeping Honolulu green and clean.

The expo showcased the efforts of city, state and federal agencies to preserve and protect Hawaii's environment, with an emphasis on the islands' unique water resources.

Family-friendly activities included picture-taking with Apoha the oopu, water pollution prevention games, arts and crafts, and storytelling about Hawaii's environment.

At the ocean, children released dozens of Moi into the wild behind the expo and explained the proposed Ala Wai watershed project to participants.

The Corps is teaming up with the City and County of Honolulu and the State of Hawaii to study various solutions for a comprehensive watershed approach to reducing the risk of flooding in Waikiki and to improving the water quality of the area.

Barger manned the Corps' booth at the event to educate the community on issues in the watershed and objectives of the Ala Wai project study.

Partners in the Ala Wai watershed project also provided booths at the event: the Natural Resources Conservation Service, City and County Department of Environmental Services, Board of Water Supply, Department of Land and Natural Resources, Commission for Water Resource Management, and the Department of Health.

All of the events featured familyfriendly and hands-on educational displays by city, state and federal agencies, and the University of Hawaii. Hundreds of people participated in several other events around the city and county, including many adopt-a-stream clean ups in the Ala Wai watershed.

Blue Star Card holders learn to paddle like professionals

WAIANAE – Blue Star Card members grabbed paddles and stood next to large stand-up paddleboards at Pokai Bay Beach, April16, for a lesson from the Schofield Barracks Outdoor Recreation Center (ODR).

The eight family members listened as Gerald Vidal, recreation assistant, Martinez Physical Fitness Center, Schofield Barracks, explained various procedures and techniques for successful paddling.

With the sand balancing the boards beneath them, each family member practiced knee positions, foot placement and stance, standing up and paddle strokes. Launching the board, dismounting and safety were also discussed.

"Don't think about balancing; just do it," said Rich Robinson, assistant manager for ODR, offering advice. "Use fluid motions."

Family members then launched their boards into a steady sea and practiced the techniques. Within minutes, nearly all the participants were standing and paddling like the pros.

Family members practice techniques on Pokai Beach before attempting to paddle on the stand-up board in the water.

"Look at everyone," said Pete Bautista, program specialist, ODR, pointing from the shore. "They are all up and on their way.

"That took no time at all," added Bautista, smiling.

Participants took several laps around the bay, stopping to watch a pod of spinner dolphins flipping through the air approximately 10 feet in front of them. A sea turtle poked his head out of the water and began to swim alongside family member Erica Wetzel.

"Hawaii has so much to offer," said Wetzel, "so many new things to try and experience. It's great to have this chance."

Stand-up paddling was new for Wetzel, and her experience was a good one.

"Some things you are never sure you can do until you try," she said.

"I'm really glad (Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation) offered this opportunity," said family member Kyle Meisner. "It gives us a chance to learn new things."

"When my husband redeploys, I'll be taking him stand-up paddling," said Meisner.

For family member Jacqueline Lai, the art of stand-up paddling was harder than it looked.

"It's difficult, but a lot of fun," said Lai. "I'm glad I tried it and will definitely be coming out more."

Stand-up paddling is taking the world by storm and is practiced in Hawaii, overseas and all across the continental United States.

Enthusiasts are using rivers, lakes and oceans across the world for stand-up paddling, whether to ride the waves or enjoy a casual paddle session across a steady stream.

Stand-up paddling offers great exercise and an exhilarating experience on the water, according to Robinson.

"And it's fun," added Robinson.
