FORT SHAFTER — In a bittersweet ceremony, the inactivation and color-casing of U.S. Army Garrison-Oahu was held here, May 24.

The ceremony showed appreciation and dignity for the tremendous work and responsibility that USAG-O personnel accomplished in caring for Soldiers and families during decades of support to the Fort Shafter and Schofield Barracks communities.

"Over all these years, this garrison has provided invaluable support services to our customers — the Soldiers and civilian employees who work on our installations, the family members who live there, our military retirees, veterans and others," said Col. Douglas Mulbury, commander, USAG-Hawaii.

USAG-O had coordinated and integrated base operations support for all organizations on Oahu's Army installations. The Oahu garrison's goal had been to ensure the health, safety and well-being for all — resulting in POHAKULOA TRAINING AREA — Enemy targets that have been spotted in the open, but are out of range, are difficult and dangerous scenarios for Soldiers on the battlefield, as these targets are an explicit but unattainable threat.

Fortunately, with close air support assets in the vicinity, ground forces can engage and destroy these threats from a distance.

Close air support is air action against a hostile enemy target in the proximity of friendly forces.

25th ID celebrates Asian-Pacific culture

Deployed Forces

Downrange events underscore significance of traditional dances and other prominent aspects of Asian-Pacific Islanders' culture

SGT. JENNIFER SARDAM
29th Mobile Public Affairs Detachment

BAGHDAD – Service members from throughout U.S. Division-Center recently commemorated Asian-Pacific American Heritage Month at Camp Liberty, here, with a guest speaker and a performance with a variety of cultural dances.

"We really want to educate on some of the things that have happened in the culture," said Sgt. 1st Class Marliser Fergerson, advisor, Equal Opportunity, 25th Infantry Division, and the primary organizer of the event.

"It's (Asian and Pacific Islanders') time to be highlighted on what they have done ... and still continue to do," she said.

"If one person that shows up to this observance learns something about this culture – maybe why they dance the way they do, or why they speak the way they do – it will give them a totally different outlook on them, on the culture (and) on life," she said.

The event encompassed a number of Asian and Pacific Islander dance styles, from a war dance of the Maori tribesmen of New Zealand to a traditional Saipan dance, where women welcomed home men returning from battle.

"In our (Samoan) culture, you may not understand what the song may be, because it may be in a native language or whatever, but our hands and our eyes tell the story," said Cpl. Theresa Faoa, promotions noncommissioned officer, Headquarters and Headquarters Battalion, 25th ID.

The various forms of dance seen on stage, here, originated in lands far removed from the desert environment of Iraq, but to some service members, the scenes were familiar and delivered a touch of home.

Many 25th ID Soldiers recognized a mix of the same cultural influences found in Hawaii, where nuances of Tahitian, Japanese, Samoan, Fijian and other cultures can be found.

"For us (in the 25th ID), that's home," Fergerson said. "When we leave here, that's where we go back to, and that's home. That's where our families are."

Soldiers from USD-Center perform during a celebration in honor of Asian-Pacific American Heritage Month, at Camp Liberty, Iraq, May 20.

ID, was honored to showcase some of his own cultural roots through dances like the Faataupati, a traditional Samoan men's dance also known as the "slap dance."

"I take pride in where I come from, and I want to show everybody else where we come from, how we live (and) our culture," he said.

"Understanding those differences is important," Matautia said. "I think that's the main reason why I wanted to partake in the event."

Although the event centered on recognizing significant achievements of people with Asian or Pacific Island descent, it was an exercise in teamwork that benefited all.

"You see different races; you see Hispanic ... and you see African-Americans up there, so it's not just about being an Asian-Pacific Islander," Faoa said. "It's just coming together as a group, and through our diversity, we're able to just mesh as one."

"That's how the military is, period," she said. "You see that on the stage, but then, we also see that in uniform, too."

325th BSB settles into new mission

1ST LT. KATHLEEN PULLIAM

3rd Brigade Combat Team,
25th Infantry Division

AFGHANISTAN – The 325th Brigade Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade Combat Team, 25th Infantry Division, has taken the reigns of support missions in the provinces of Nangarhar, Kunar and Nuristan, here, recently.

Based out of Forward Operating Base Fenty, Soldiers in Company A, 325th BSB, 3rd BCT, took over all supply support activity, ammunition transfers and holding points, sling-loads and the delivering of fuel and water to smaller FOBs and combat outposts in Regional Command East.

They also inherited hundreds of miles of travel through mountainous roads that must be traversed to sustain the FOBs and combat outposts in the "Task Force Broncos" area of operations.

Co. B, 325th BSB, 3rd BCT, took over the maintenance and readiness of vehicles, weapons, generators and radios for the brigade headquarters, as well as operations of the entry control point, or ECP, at FOB Fenty, the third largest FOB in theater.

"The Soldiers at the ECP are doing a tremendous job," said 1st Sgt. Neil Craig, first sergeant, Co. B, 325th BSB, 3rd BCT. "By ensuring that every measure is in place to only permit authorized personnel and equipment onto the FOB, they secure the safety of the vast coalition forces and civilian contractors. They do all of this despite extremely long hours and taxing weather conditions."

Co. C, the medical company for 325th BSB, 3rd BCT, now handles all medical evacuations and patient care for TF Bronco. The company runs the only level-two-plus medical facility in the area, which includes a Forward Surgical Team, dental, labs, X-rays, a pharmacy, physical therapy, behavioral health, routine medical appointments and preventative medicine.

Providers also work a rotation to all the outlying FOBs and combat outposts, which ensures all Soldiers are provided with medical care.

At FOB Fenty, Headquarters and Headquarters Co. has grown to encompass the Base Defense Operations Center, internal base operations, a personal security detachment/quick reaction force and Afghan partnership teams located at two different FOBs. This is all in addition to the traditional battalion headquarters, battalion staff sections – personnel, intelligence, plans and operations, supply, signal and support operations – and a headquarters platoon.

BDOC Soldiers maintain the security of the FOB. They fortify fighting positions and make general improvements to the security of the FOB and surrounding area. BDOC also monitors everything that is happening on and around the FOB, controls the alerts of both pending and immediate threats, and consistently partners with local Afghans to make FOB Fenty a safer establishment.

Further, BDOC Soldiers ensure all FOB tenants' concerns and needs are taken care of through their integrated staff, including Afghans.

"Working in Base Ops truly is like running a small city," said Capt. Daniel Callahan, base ops officer in charge, 325th BSB, 3rd BCT. "Everyone brings their concerns and issues to us, and we try to make everyone as happy as possible – within reason."

Afghan partnership teams consist of 18 Soldiers, who are partnered with the Afghan national army's 5th Combat Service Support Bn., with whom they will train, work and live with for the next year.

"We intend to focus on the partnership with the ANA and increase their involvement in our combat logistic patrols in order to resupply both ANA and U.S. Army units concurrently," said Maj. Larry Johnson, executive officer, 325th BSB, 3rd BCT. "The joint operations will result in increased confidence of the ANA in their ability to be a sustaining force, when coalition forces withdraw from Afghanistan."

3rd BCT, Afghan medics come together for learning, laughs

NANGARHAR PROVINCE, Afghanistan — A rustic tent sheltered Soldiers from the harsh Afghanistan heat, while men and women singing in a foreign language and dancing together were projected on a white sheet, hanging from a ceiling, as Soldiers nudged each other in enthusiastic delight.

Combat medics assigned to 3rd Battalion, 7th Field Artillery Regiment, "Task Force Steel," 3rd Brigade Combat Team, 25th Infantry Division, and Afghan Border Police soldiers, recently shared a good laugh during a lunchtime break, before they continued training.

Afghan and U.S. Soldiers were participating in ongoing joint medical training at Fire Base Torkam, here.

"All right, where did we leave off?" said Spc.

Erik Michelson, combat medic, 3rd Bn., 7th FA Regt., 3rd BCT.

The heads of the students snapped to follow the words and gestures of the interpreter. After a few seconds, many voices raised and gestures were made to the leg bones.

"That's right, we were learning how to splint a leg bone, so let's try it on each other," Michelson said.

The ABP soldiers eagerly took the supplies and quickly broke down into groups of three to demonstrate their knowledge of splinting procedures.

"We understand each other even without the interpreter. They watch and we gesture a lot," said Spc. David Lurch III, combat medic, 3rd Bn., 7th FA Regt., 3rd BCT.

"The language hasn't really been a problem; we just work around it. (Although,) we had some misunderstandings, such as the 'nose hose' – a tube placed in the nose to open the airway.

"The training is a little slower, because we have to translate everything to teach them," he said, "but overall, we have overcome the language barrier."

Both the U.S. Army Soldiers' and ABP soldiers' willingness to exchange ideas and humor helped overcome the language barrier.

"We joke around together, they play jokes on us, and we joke with them," said Pfc. Jimmy Serrano, combat medic, 3rd Bn., 7th FA Regt., 3rd BCT.

"They have learned a little English to communicate with us better."

Even with the jokes and budding friendships, both groups took instructions very seriously.

"They don't have full-time combat medics, they do have a doctor and a similar aid station, but (they have) no medical treatment during patrols," Serrano said, comparing the training of U.S. Army Soldiers to that of ABP. "This makes immediate medical training in high demand."

"This training is very helpful to us, because we are learning how to take care of our friends during combat," said Sgt. Gull Rahman, ABP.

Through teaching, learning, shared lunches, laughter and much gesturing, barriers were broken.

Soldiers are more confident in their own ability to properly provide medical treatment to their friends in combat, no matter what language they speak.

Spc. David Lurch III, (kneeling, right) combat medic, 3rd Bn., 7th FA Regt., 3rd BCT, 25th ID, shows ABP soldiers how to properly wrap a leg bone fracture during a medical training exercise at Torkham Fire Base, May 13.

CSF brings balance, resilience to 84th Eng. Bn. community

2ND LT. JYMETTE WATROUS

Forward Support Company, 84th Engineer Battalion, 130th Eng. Brigade, 8th Theater Sustainment Command

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS — The 84th Engineer Battalion, 130th Eng. Brigade, 8th Theater Sustainment Command, is creating an Army of balanced, healthy, self-confident Soldiers, families and Army civilians, whose resilience enables them to thrive in an era of high operational tempo and persistent conflict.

The unit is using the five pillars of the Comprehensive Soldier Fitness, or CSF, which are physical, emotional, social, family and spiritual fitness.

The 84th Eng. Bn., 130th Eng. Bde., recognizes the absolute necessity for CSF, and it has taken progressive steps to improve the quality of life and overall readiness of its Soldiers.

"I think you'll find that in every high-performing unit, Soldier readiness is directly linked to mission success," said Lt. Col. Jerry Farnsworth, commander, 84th Eng. Bn., 130th Eng. Bde. "In these units, leaders care and are involved with their Soldiers and families.

"The CSF program allows leaders to build resiliency and coping skills that will better serve our Soldiers and families, keeping them strong no matter what the challenge is," he said.

CSF is a program based on more than 30 years of study that strives to provide Soldiers, families and Army civilians with the tools they need to thrive in the Army and lead balanced, healthy lives.

CSF provides individual assessments, tailored virtual training, classroom training and resilience experts to all Department of Defense personnel and their families.

During one of the battalion's recent safety days, a Unit Risk Inventory, or URI, was conducted on all Soldiers and family members present at the event. A URI is a group survey that is designed to identify high-risk behaviors and/or attitudes within an organization.

When the results came in, Farnsworth was able to see which CSF pillars the battalion was lacking in, and therefore, what areas needed improvement. Resiliency training was an area both Soldiers and families could benefit from.

"Resiliency training is teaching Soldiers and families how to manage and cope with the difficulties they face, and how to maximize the abundant aid and opportunities the Army provides for them," said 1st Sgt. Pierre Mize, master resiliency trainer, or MRT, 84th Eng. Bn., 130th Eng. Bde.

Based on URI results, a team — comprised of Mize; Chaplain (Capt.) Mark McCorkle, MRT; and 2nd Lt. Jymette Watrous, safety officer, all with the 84th Eng. Bn., 130th Eng. Bde. — was established to tailor the battalion's CSF program.

The team developed a plan that will bring Army opportunities to the doorstep of the battalion; this opportunity includes bringing in Military Family Life Consultants, financial advisors and medical personnel to speak with Soldiers and families on a regular basis. They also developed a new plan that will provide more training on the consideration of others and resiliency.

The battalion will continue focusing on spiritual events; fami-

Armywide program advocates resilience through spirituality

NANCY RASMUSSEN

Army News Service

FORT RUCKER, Ala. — The words spiritual and spirituality mean many things to many people.

According to the Comprehensive Soldier Fitness spiritual fitness module, spirituality is the human spirit or the essential core of a person.

CSF, an Armywide program, offers assessment tools to help Soldiers, families and Department of Army civilians become resilient — not only physically, but in areas of emotional, family, social and spiritual fitness as well.

Based on the premise that spiritual fitness defines the deepest part of the individual, resiliency requires a conscientious strengthening of beliefs, principles and values, according to CSF.

"Not all people believe in God or any supreme being, but they still possess a spiritual being within them," said Chaplain (Col.) Stephen Cook, garrison chaplain, here.

While everyone experiences situations that can test the human spirit, CSF suggests that these struggles can be a sign of strength and courage. These are opportunities to re-examine individual beliefs to redefine lives and, ultimately, become more spiritually fit and resilient during the most challenging times.

In this dimension, CSF considers spirituality as that which you value most deeply or hold sacred, or as spiritual struggles and the tension or conflict within yourself, with others or with a higher power about your deepest values or what you hold sacred.

"While we as chaplains see spiritual fitness to be a religious issue, spirituality transcends the day-to-day stuff of life and looks at something much deeper and meaningful and broader in scope," Cook said. "I think spirituality allows anyone to look at a bigger picture, instead of just the foxhole they are in. In all of this, if the spiritual nature of an individual is tapped, it should give hope for the future.

"Whatever enemy you may be fighting — a combatant, a bad memory or a problem back at home — your human spirit can sustain you," he added.

The Army CSF spiritual fitness module aims to help strengthen an individual's set of beliefs, principles or values to sustain beyond family, institutional and societal sources of strength, which ultimately results in a person becoming more spiritually fit and resilient during times of greatest challenge.

The CSF website suggests ways for individuals to build spiritual resiliency:

- Develop an attitude of gratitude.
- Learn the value of being part of something larger than self.
- Explore the benefits of being connected to a community.
- Look for and appreciate the positive things that happen.
- Learn why people tend to overemphasize the negative.
- Discover why and how to intentionally seek the good stuff.
- Practice journaling to increase awareness of the positive things life offers you.

The CSF Global Assessment Tool, featuring the confidential spiritual fitness module and feedback, is available at www.army.mil/csf.

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS — Soldiers and officers shared breakfast and fellowship during 45th Sustainment Brigade, 8th Theater Sust. Command's spring prayer breakfast, May 18, at the K Quad dining facility, here.

Chaplain (Col.) David Neetz, command chaplain, 8th TSC, was the guest speaker for the event, delivering a sermon focused on the importance of prayer.

"The prayer breakfast provides Soldiers and leaders the chance to spiritually reflect and to have a moment of relaxation," said Sgt. Jaimey Swafford, chaplain's assistant, 524th Combat Sust. Support Battalion, 45th Sust. Bde. "This, in turn, builds spiritual resiliency and sustainment."

A Hope Chapel praise team provided musical entertainment during the event, performing a number of contemporary Christian songs and time-honored hymns, such as "Amazing Grace."

"Our brigade is absolutely blessed by having the opportunity to have such a dynamic prayer breakfast," Swafford said. "The Hope Chapel praise team adds so much spiritual energy."

Prayer breakfasts and other chaplain-sponsored events provide Soldiers with a chance to maintain and strengthen their spiritual fitness, as well as meet other Soldiers who share their faith.

Events also help increase unit cohesion and readiness and provide Soldiers with a wider support structure.

Inaugural Air Assault School helps attendee overcome fears

SPC. MARCUS FICHTL

8th Military Police Brigade Public Affairs, 8th Theater Sustainment Command

WHEELER ARMY AIRFIELD — It takes a village to raise a Soldier, but it takes a Soldier to graduate Air Assault School.

2nd Lt. Brett Brown, long-range plans officer, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 8th Military Police Brigade, 8th Theater Sustainment Command, graduated from the inaugural Air Assault School, here, May 11.

The Air Assault School was once an active component of the training program on Schofield Barracks, but it was discontinued due to continued deployments in support of overseas contingency operations.

The last class held in the Schofield Barracks Air Assault School was in 2005. Because of the high operational tempo, the Air Assault School became a low priority and instruction was temporarily ceased — until now.

Toothpick thin, brand new to the Army and with a fear of heights, Brown was one of five people chosen from the brigade to go to Air Assault School, a 10-day course that teaches air assault techniques, including rappelling from helicopters and preparing sling-loads.

The course also includes a 12-mile march that tests both the physical and mental capabilities of its students.

Rumored to be one of the most physically-challenging, 10-day schools in the Army, most Soldiers take months to prepare for the course.

"I was nervous and excited. I knew I only had 12 days to prepare, but this was my opportunity to challenge myself," Brown said.

But failure and doubt were not options for Brown or the long-range plans shop he belongs to.

"Him being in our shop (and) me being air assault (qualified), there was no way he would fail," said Staff Sgt. Marcus Mitchell, plans noncommissioned officer, HHC, 8th MP Bde. "If one of us is tackling a task, then we are all tackling that task."

Mitchell said shop members taught Brown how to pass the obstacles smartly, emphasizing the use of legs, as the air assault cadre would employ push-ups and bear crawls in between obstacles to render the arms useless. They conducted multiple packing list inspections, and they emphasized that any opportunity to get extra help from instructors was an opportunity that Brown could not let pass.

"If it wasn't for Mitchell, I wouldn't have been going to Commandant's Time — time where the cadre gave extra help — and could have easily been part of the 75 Soldiers who failed their rigging inspections," Brown said.

But conquering a fear of heights, however, was all on Brown.

"One of the things they tell you to do (when you are preparing to rappel) is to look where you are going, and they're yelling that you need to look down," Brown said. "I was like, 'Well, this sucks.'

This is terrifying for me, but I'm not going to quit."

He didn't quit. Finishing the road march in under three hours, with a third of his body weight on his back, Brown was one of the 130 Soldiers who passed the course, out of 240 who started.

"When he asked me (to pin him), it was an honor," Mitchell said. "This is the first time I've been asked to pin wings on (someone)."

Sgt. Troy Halley (background), and 2nd Lt. Kyle Chamberlin, both with the 65th Eng. Bn., 130th Eng. Bde., 8th TSC, wait in a landing zone for a UH-60 Black Hawk helicopter to land at PTA, recently.

the landing zone and re-entered the Black Hawks.

The air to ground integration training was a valuable opportunity for Soldiers to observe and employ close air support assets.

"It was great familiarization training," said 2nd Lt. Kyle Chamberlin, operations, 65th Eng. Bn., 130th Eng. Bde. "Really being able to see what I had just called over the radio gave me confidence, should I need air support in the future."

While Soldiers in garrison train for close air and artillery support on virtual simulators, there are no substitutions for field training events, such as these, in regards to air-ground integration training.

"We don't get many chances to practice calling for air support in an environment where the birds actually show up," Koprowski said. "It's great training for our junior leaders and will pay dividends downrange."

PTA's expanse of mountainous terrain is an ideal location for close air support training.

Pilot's skills benefit law mission

HONOLULU — "Clear!" the pilot yelled, looking around.

He started the engine of the Cessna 172R, an airplane with a cockpit no larger than the inside of a sports car, in preparation for a short flight around the island of Oahu.

With his headphones secured tightly to his head, and the microphone kissing his lips, he looked down to read the preflight checklist in his lap.

Turning knobs and switching gauges, he was mentally checking one item off the list at a time.

Within minutes, the plane was soaring just below the clouds.

Being a licensed pilot and a practicing lawyer is all in a day's work for Lt. Col. Jordan Clouse, deputy staff judge advocate, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, 9th Mission Support Command, U.S. Army Reserve.

Recently, Clouse found a way to combine his love for flying with his everyday job. He and a colleague were called to Maui to help provide powers of attorney, wills and legal consultations to Reserve Soldiers. Clouse saw the mission as a chance to put his skills to good use.

"We had battle assembly that weekend, so we went to first formation at 6:30 a.m. and left straight from there to Honolulu Airport. We were off the ground by 8:30 a.m.," Clouse said. "We flew to Maui and were set up for work by 10:30 a.m. After we saw about 20 Soldiers, we were done by 1:30 p.m. and flew home."

The best part was, we still made it in plenty of time for our 4 p.m. final formation," he added.

Clouse was able to support the mission about three-and-a-half hours faster and a lot cheaper than using commercial air — all in one duty day.

"I don't think I did anything special," Clouse said. "Basically, I saw a job that needed to get done, so I did it."

Clouse began his lessons last June. By Sept. 2, 2010, he was on his first, supervised, solo flight.

He flew by himself for the first time, Sept. 11, 2010, and by Dec. 7, 2010, he was a licensed pilot.

"Those are very significant days in military history," he said. "My supervised, solo (flight) was done on the anniversary of the end of World War II, Sept. 11 is the day we'll never forget, and I was licensed on the anniversary of the Pearl Harbor attack. What better way to symbolize my experience?"

After more than 30 years in the Army, Clouse plans to retire no later than 2016. In the meantime, he is preparing for life after the military.

"I'm not sure what path I'm going to take after retirement," Clouse said. "I have so many options."

... We'll see what the future holds."

Lt. Col. Jordan Clouse, deputy staff judge advocate, OSJA, 9th MSC, speaks to an air traffic controller after taking off for a flight over Oahu. Clouse, also a licensed pilot, combines his love for flying with his everyday job and uses the aircraft to carry out missions on other islands.

25th CAB sharpens safety skills to ensure mission readiness

CAPT. OZZIE SANTIAGO SMITH III

25th Combat Aviation Brigade Public Affairs, 25th Infantry Division

WHEELER ARMY AIRFIELD — Every Soldier is responsible for safety, and this fact is more than just words.

Safety is a way of life for members of the 25th Combat Aviation Brigade, 25th Infantry Division.

As the brigade is preparing for the rigors of deployment through intense and focused aviation training, 25th CAB leadership has identified the need for aviation Soldiers, noncommissioned officers and officers to sharpen their ground safety skills and programs.

To ensure Soldiers are receiving proper training, the 25th CAB hosted the Ground Safety Officer Course, or GSOC, April 4-May 13, here, with help from a Mobile Training Team, out of the U.S. Combat Readiness Center at Fort Rucker, Ala.

GSOC trains Soldiers in the proper techniques needed to become certified as qualified safety personnel for the 25th CAB. GSOC is a six-week course that teaches composite risk management, explosives safety management, accident investigation, reporting, range safety, occupational safety and health standards.

25th CAB Soldiers who complete the course will have a skill identifier, highlighting them as safety experts.

Kai Laborte (rear, far left), instructor, GSOC, teaches 25th CAB, 25th ID Soldiers about pre-accident planning at the Digital Training Facility, Wheeler Army Airfield, May 6.

"There is no better way to help the command than by giving them a trained safety professional," said Lee Helberg, course manager, GSOC. "They assist commanders in identifying safety issues and correcting problems."

The GSOC trained and certified 32 safety officers and NCOs from the 25th CAB, who will assist leaders in accomplishing their mission in garrison and deployed environments safely. Safety officers are trained to examine operations and analyze hazards. GSOC graduates develop and recommend multiple courses of actions for commanders, to implement and improve safety and proficiency of their Soldiers.

"The GSOC is equivalent to college-level courses," said Amy Cichowski, site manager, Digital Training Facility. "Much of its instruction is carried in college curriculums throughout the nation. All the students are fully engaged and very happy to be here."

Additionally, GSOC increases current safety officers' operational expertise.

"This is one of the better courses I have attended," said 1st Lt. Amanda Allen, Company A, 209th Avn. Support Battalion, "Lobos," 25th CAB. "The instructors are very thorough."

Unit-level safety officers gained information during this training that will aid battalions, companies and platoons in safely complete training tasks as they prepare for deployment. The GSOC graduates, who will integrate their knowledge into day-to-day activities, understand they are key assets for their commanders.

MAR2 strives to eliminate 'bog-down' in procedures, processes

SGT. 1ST CLASS RODNEY JACKSON

18th Medical Command (Deployment Support) Public Affairs

FORT SHAFTER — Soldiers of the 18th Medical Command (Deployment Support) received interesting information about upcoming changes to the military occupation specialty's Medical Retention Board, or MOS/MMRB, during a briefing, here, May 18.

Col. Erin Edgar, commander, 18th MEDCOM (DS), and Army physician, briefed the unit on current procedures for the MOS/MMRB, and how the MOS/Administrative Retention Review program, or MAR2, will eliminate the "local installation system bog-down" that occurs during the process.

"The MAR2 system will be owned by Army Retention and will no longer be a (Human Resources) process," Edgar said. "The differences are slight, but I think they're for the better. Instead of having a (bunch of guys sitting around the table) at the local installation, everything is sent to HR, and HR Command makes the determination."

Under the MMRB process, there are four outcomes: retain the Soldier in the current MOS, reclassify to a new MOS, go in a probationary status or refer to the Medical Evaluation Board, or MEB.

The MEB outcome is either qualified or not qualified for retention, and the Physical Evaluation

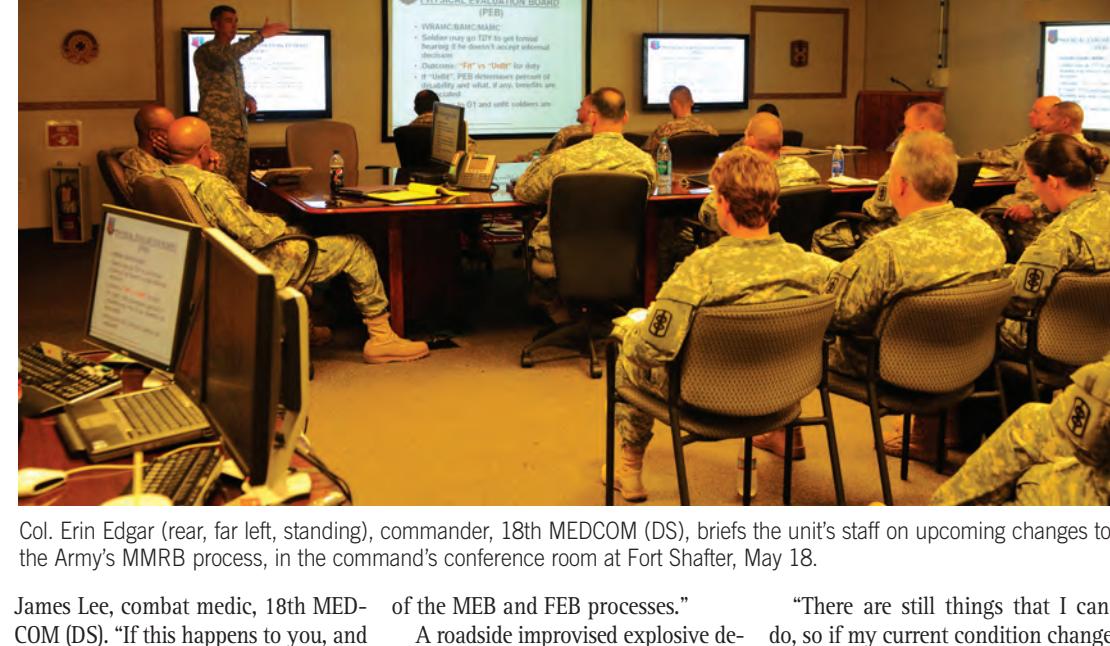

Board, or FEB, is either fit or unfit for duty. During an FEB, a percentage of disability is given to a Soldier.

"The threshold for medical retirement is 30 percent; the vast majority don't meet that threshold," Edgar said. "When Soldiers don't meet that threshold, they are medically separated instead of medically retired. (They) receive severance pay, which equals two times their base pay times the number of years they've served."

Under the MAR2 process, there are only three outcomes: retain in MOS, reclassify or refer to MEB. The threshold plateau is determined before the packet is forwarded to HRC, which eliminates the paperwork shuffle through local installations and to HRC, Edgar added.

"The outcome of most FEBs is unfit," Edgar said. "If Soldiers really want to stay on active duty, and the chain of command backs them, the FEB weighs this input greatly."

"I was one of those wounded guys that came through the Warrior Transition Battalion and had to do a lot to stay in the Army," said Sgt. 1st Class

Col. Erin Edgar (rear, far left, standing), commander, 18th MEDCOM (DS), briefs the unit's staff on upcoming changes to the Army's MMRB process, in the command's conference room at Fort Shafter, May 18.

James Lee, combat medic, 18th MEDCOM (DS). "If this happens to you, and you want to stay in the military, the military boards will work with you, but you have to work within the rules of the MEB and FEB processes."

A roadside improvised explosive device hit Lee's convoy during a deployment to Iraq, and he sustained life-threatening injuries.

"There are still things that I can't do, so if my current condition changes at any aspect ... obviously they re-evaluate me, and I go back through the process," he said.

196th Inf. Bde. puts emphasis on motorcycle safety with inspections

CAPT. ISAAC A. FLOYD

Support Battalion, 196th Infantry Brigade, U.S. Army-Pacific

FORT SHAFTER — The National Highway Transportation Safety Administration observes the month of May as Motorcycle Safety Awareness Month.

The observance is a national safety initiative that focuses on getting motorists and motorcyclists to share the road with one another. It also promotes the thought that motorcycle safety is an issue for all motorists and not just motorcyclists.

Support Battalion, 196th Infantry Brigade, U.S. Army-Pacific, conducted vehicle inspections on all personally owned vehicles, or POVs, and motorcycles, here, recently, in honor of Motorcycle Safety Awareness Month.

The battalion has designated safety as a priority when it involves Soldiers' lives, and the event was especially important as more than 20 percent of Support Bn. Soldiers are motorcyclists.

Battalion leadership encouraged all motorcyclists to attend the Advanced Motorcycle Course, "Train as you Ride," to also reinforce safety. The course focused on cornering techniques and throttle control while turning. It also simulated road conditions and turn geometry typically found on Oahu, using realistic road speeds of 35-60 mph.

Each rider had the opportunity to ride more than 40 miles and practice more than 500 curves, all under the watchful eye of California Superbike School-trained instructors. If the instructors saw an unsafe riding technique or potential hazard, they would stop a rider along the course and correct him or her on the spot.

"As a licensed motorcycle rider and former owner of one, I will never apologize for being a stickler and over-cautious when it comes to motorcycle safety," said Lt. Col. Fletcher Washington, commander, Support Bn., 196th Inf. Bde. "I am always saddened by the many senseless POV and (motorcycle) accidents reported in the Army's daily preliminary loss reports."

For Motorists

- Look for motorcyclists: Use your eyes and mirrors to see what's around you, and check your blind spots when you're changing lanes or turning at intersections. Look, and look again.
- Focus on driving: Don't be distracted. Hang up the phone, put down the MP3 player, settle the passengers and drive.
- Use your turn signals: Signal your intentions with ample time for everyone's safety. It's the law.
- Give motorcyclists some room: Don't tailgate or pass too closely.
- Take your time: Nothing is as important as the safety of your loved ones in your vehicle, as others with whom you share the road and as you, so slow down.
- Keep it in the car: Don't throw trash and cigarettes out the window. Securely lash down cargo that can fall out on the road, as falling cargo can be a deadly hazard.

Courtesy Photo

Leadership with Support Bn., 196th Inf. Bde., USARPAC, encourages its Soldiers to attend motorcycle classes, like the one above, known as "Train as You Ride," to reinforce awareness.

"All POV and (motorcycle) operators must always keep in mind that there is no such thing as a 'minor fender-bender' when it comes to a (motorcycle) accident," Fletcher said.

With the increase in gas prices, spring session for school coming to an end and summer just around the corner, leadership expects to see more motorcyclists on the road.

For Motorcyclists

- Get properly trained and licensed: Take a Motorcycle Safety Foundation-approved rider course and get licensed by the Department of Motor Vehicles.
- Wear protective gear: Gear should be worn all the time. Service members, however, do not have an option; they must wear gear all the time — on and off an installation. Gear needs to be bright and reflective, including a helmet manufactured to Department of Transportation standards.
- Ride unimpaired: Never drink or use other drugs before getting on a motorcycle.
- Ride within your limits and obey traffic laws: Stay within your personal limits, never riding faster or farther than your abilities can handle.
- Be a lifelong learner: Regularly attend refresher riding courses, as they break bad riding habits. Visit <https://safety.army.mil/> for more information.

Charger Challenge

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS — Soldiers with the 196th Infantry Brigade, U.S. Army-Pacific, participate in the 2011 Charger Challenge Competition to determine the unit's Noncommissioned Officer of the Year, here, recently.

The contest tests candidates' skills and knowledge against themselves, each other and the Army standards in today's contemporary operating environment.

Candidates faced rigorous tests that challenged their Soldier skills, qualities and abilities. Events included an Army Physical Fitness Test, an M4 qualification, five hands-on warrior tasks, day and night land navigation, a six-mile foot march, an M9 qualification, modern Army combatives, a written examination, an essay and a command sergeants' major board.

The winner of this year's Charger Challenge is Sgt. 1st Class, Brandon Cruz, 3rd Battalion, 196th Inf. Bde., who will represent the brigade in the USARPAC Warrior Challenge Competition.

enhanced Army and family readiness.

USAG-O had managed numerous programs and functions, such as the Shelter Management Program, the Installation Appearance Program, fundraising, land use, commercial solicitation, various community and advisory forms, the Juvenile Review Board, and reception and replacement operations for incoming installation Soldiers.

The Oahu garrison had also organized many special events, including the holiday tree lighting ceremonies at Schofield Barracks and Fort Shafter every holiday season.

All former USAG-O services have now been or will be assumed by USAG-HI directorates.

The inactivation of USAG-O has been a long process, taking many months and involving the transfer of numerous support functions and reassignment of civilian employees to other directorates within USAG-HI.

"You may worry that without (USAG-O) headquartered in the south that the garrison liaison support will diminish," said Linda Keller, garrison manager, USAG-HI. "On the contrary, Debra Zedalis, regional director, Installation Management Command-Pacific, and (Mulbury), have established an Installation Coordinators Office at Fort Shafter to be a liaison for the south community."

HUREX: Makani Pahili tests readiness, abilities

In addition, Makani Pahili 2011 provides an opportunity for local, state and federal agencies to test their plans, readiness and abilities during the annual hurricane exercise.

"Makani Pahili also serves as a foundation for service components to review, update and continue to improve their plans and build their readiness capabilities," said Mel Garcia, operations deputy, JTF-HD.

JTF-HD's mission in Makani Pahili is to help direct military resources during a natural or man-made disaster. The organization generally plays a pivotal role in helping Hawaii and other mid-Pacific Island communities prepare and recover from disasters, and to coordinate requests from local governments for military assistance.

Weather and disaster experts predict that a Category 4 hurricane could cause billions of dollars worth of property damage and hundreds of deaths, if it were to zero in on populous areas of Oahu. It's predicted that the recovery from such a storm would quickly overwhelm local and state resources, thus the requirement for federal assistance. That's when JTF-HD would likely come into play, providing the coordination for help from military assets.

In the scenario, JTF-HD will likely use military services to play pivotal roles in assessing requests for aid and matching them with military assets and resources. Its primary mission will be to execute operations to provide civil support for hazards, including responding to and recovering from natural disasters, retaining key and critical infrastructure, and protecting the force within the joint operations area.

JTF-HD is a coordinating agency between DOD and civilian authorities in Hawaii, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of Northern Mariana Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, the Republic of Marshall Islands and the Republic of Palau.

Social media spurs town hall participation

JACK WIERS

U.S. Army Garrison-Hawaii Public Affairs

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS — Fueled by social media, the latest edition of the televised garrison town hall produced a fast-paced, 75-minute broadcast of information to Soldiers and their families from the Visual Information studio, here, May 18.

The first half of the town hall broadcast featured six "Army Ready"-themed briefings that ranged from hurricane season readiness to details about the new Warrior Ohana Medical Home in Kalaeloa.

Col. Douglas Mulbury, commander, U.S. Army Garrison-Hawaii, hosted the live broadcast, which was also shown live, via streaming video, on both the garrison's webpage and through the garrison's Facebook page.

"We're learning that we have some powerful new communication tools to reach our Soldiers and family members," Mulbury said. "We are just beginning to tap the new media's potential."

The broadcast also featured a half-hour question-and-answer segment, with questions gathered from both the garrison's Ask the Commander email address and its Facebook page.

Subject matter experts addressed nearly 20 questions, ranging from requests for more crossing guards near installation schools, to housing assignment priorities, to requests for greater military police support to stop illegal cell phone usage while driving on the installation.

"More people are taking advantage of the opportunity to submit questions in advance of the live broadcast," said Stephanie Rush, digital media specialist, USAG-HI Public Affairs.

Community members received information on how to submit questions in advance through a number of promotional vehicles, including email blasts, postings on websites and electronic marquee displays.

One downside to the new reliance on social media was the reluctance of members of the garrison community to call in questions, live, on the telephone, said SMEs. Those numbers have diminished significantly, to a mere trickle, they said. Participants are choosing the Internet and social media as their preferred communication sources.

"We're recognizing that people, in general, are becoming more reliant and comfortable with social media," Mulbury said. "This is where our attention needs to be in the future."

All questions submitted, regardless of whether they made the broadcast or not, will be answered, Mulbury added.

The TV town hall will be rebroadcast on installation channel TV2 for the remainder of May, and will continue to be rebroadcast throughout June, at noon and 7 p.m.

USACE begins chairlift project at National Memorial Cemetery

U.S. ARMY CORPS OF ENGINEERS-HONOLULU DISTRICT Public Affairs

FORT SHAFTER – The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers-Honolulu District began construction of a recently awarded $945,000 contract to install four chairlifts along the eastern side of the American Battle Monuments Commission's Honolulu Memorial, recently.

The memorial is within the National Memorial Cemetery of the Pacific, also known as Punchbowl, and the chairlifts will make the memorial compliant with the American Disabilities Act.

Work began this week to clean the memorial's "Courts of the Missing's" upper and lower plazas, chapel building, flagpoles, statue, fountain, stairs and handrails, and to reseal the Courts of the Missing monument and staircase.

Access to various areas of the memorial and transient movement near and adjacent to the projects may be impeded. USACE-HD and ABMC asks for the public's indulgence and patience during construction and cleaning, including for any inconvenience projects may cause during the Memorial Day and Father's Day weekends.

"When completed, these projects will improve the appearance and provide access to all five levels of this magnificent tribute to American service and sacrifice," said Max Cleland, secretary, ABMC. "We regret the short-term inconvenience projects like this cause, but the visitor experience will be greatly enhanced in the future."

The Honolulu Memorial commemorates American service members missing in action from the Pacific, including 18,096 personnel from World War II; 8,200 Americans missing from the Korean War; and 2,504 Americans missing from the Vietnam War.

Galleries containing mosaic maps and descriptions of American armed forces' achievements in the Central and South Pacific regions in World War II and in Korea flank the memorial chapel.

ABMC plans to add Vietnam War maps and descriptions to the memorial in 2012.

Memorial Day

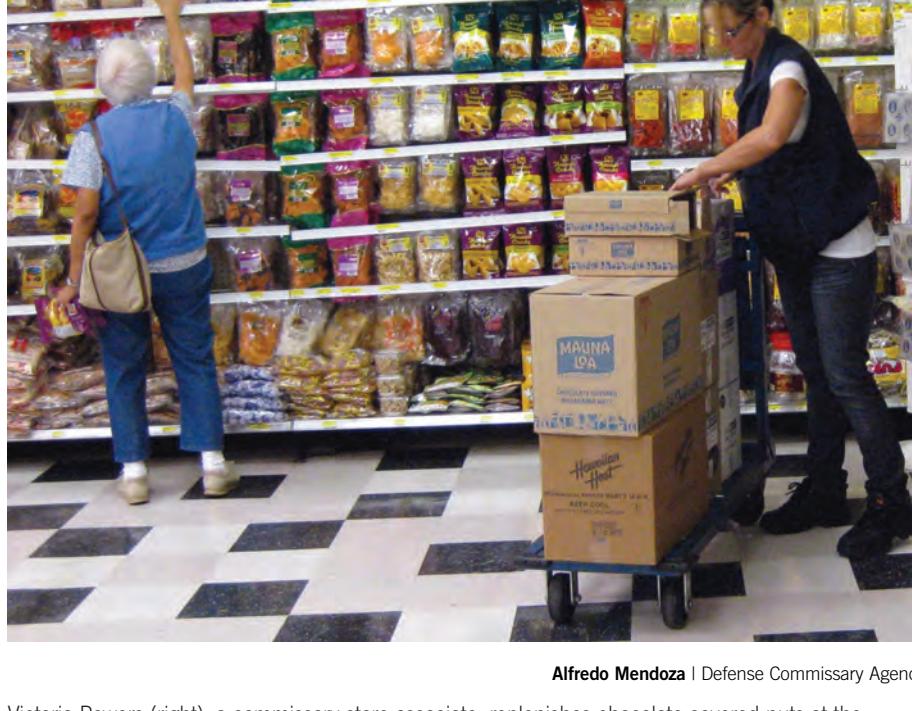

Military, local and state leaders will participate in the Mayor's Memorial Day Ceremony, 8:30 a.m., May 30, at the National Cemetery of the Pacific.

The service will also include the Royal Hawaiian Band, the Sounds of Aloha Choir, a traditional gun salute and a "Missing Man" formation flyover. Call 768-3002, or see page B-2 for additional Memorial Day events.

DEFENSE COMMISSARY AGENCY

Office of Corporate Communication

FORT LEE, Va. – The Defense Commissary Agency, or DeCA, announced that the Schofield Barracks Commissary won first place in the agency's most prestigious honors, the Annual Best Commissary Awards, Tuesday.

DeCA's Best Commissary Awards recognize overall excellence in commissary operations and service. Selection of nominees is highly competitive and is based on operations, performance and accountability.

"This recognition pays tribute to the DeCA team – employees and industry partners – who work so hard every day, worldwide, to serve our service members and their families," said Joseph Jeu, director and CEO, DeCA. "Just to be considered for a Best Commissary Award is an achievement worth noting."

Winners received their awards at the DeCA and American Logistics Association 2011 Training Event and Conference in Norfolk, Va., Tuesday.

"We were very excited about being nominated," said Lynne Llanos, assistant store director, Schofield Barracks Commissary.

"(Winning) says that we have been doing a good job. Our sales are up, our inventory is good, and ... our customers are satisfied," she said. "This is very exiting for us, because now we are the best."

"When a store wins a best commissary award, the glory goes beyond that store's employees," Jeu said. "That store's customers share the wealth as recipients of the benefit from a commissary acknowledged as one of our best."

"It takes a tremendous amount of hard work and teamwork between our employees and industry partners to meet our basic standards for delivering the commissary benefit," Jeu added. "To exceed those standards, a store is truly representing a commitment to excellence."

Can you tell me how to get to SESAME STREET?

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS — The Sesame Street/USO Experience for Military Families brought two shows, here, Saturday, and one to Aliamanu Military Reservation, Wednesday, to help military parents and children talk, listen and connect with familiar characters and important issues.

"My family is moving to a new base, I'm going to miss this place, and I'm going to miss all of you," said Katie, a military-child character who only exists in this version of Sesame Street.

"The message for military families is to promote better understanding for kids that daddy is in the military," said Sameckia Edwards, a Navy family member who brought two children to the show.

USO and Sesame Street created the show, now in its fifth iteration, in 2008, especially to educate and entertain military families, according to Lonnie Cooper, tour producer/manager, USO.

In the current tour, Elmo, Grover, Rosita, Honker and Cookie Monster help Katie feel better about an upcoming move and offer tips to make new friends, while keeping in touch with old ones — all through the catchy songs and dances one would expect from Sesame Street and USO.

"We came the last time when the show was about deployment, and my husband was getting ready to deploy," said Melisa Mode, a family member with 552nd Military Police Company, 8th MP Brigade, 8th Theater Sustainment Command. "This year it is about (permanent changes of station, or PCS), and we will be PSCing soon. The timing is perfect.

"The show is helping the kids understand how the military works," Mode added, who brought her 5-year-old son, Benjamin, and 3-year-old son, Caden, to the show.

The Sesame Street gang offered many ways for children to feel better, stay in touch and stay friends, while singing that "change brings you something new."

"This is something for parents and kids to enjoy time together," Cooper said. "This project serves the families, gives a message and entertains."

Cooper added that it was especially important to bring the free shows to multiple venues throughout Hawaii, as Hawaii is an isolated location for military families without a lot of live entertainment tours.

Jessica Dekoekkoek, a family member with 1st Battalion, 27th Infantry Regiment, 2nd Bde. Combat Team, 25th Inf. Division, brought her 2-year-old daughter, Victoria, to USO's Sesame Street to help address upcoming military family issues like redeployment, and because Victoria is obsessed with the show.

Working with U.S. Army-Garrison-Hawaii's Directorate of Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation, more than 1,550 family members attended the first two shows, receiving readiness and well-being messages with a lot of giggles, cheers and dancing feet.

"This is a good show; even the parents are singing and dancing," said Spc. Shandora Townsend, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 8th TSC, who volunteered for the event. "Plus, I got free toys!"

The half-an-hour show even offered opportunities for children to connect with their favorite characters, as they shimmied, swayed and sang out into the crowd.

Grover shakes hands with an ecstatic 5-year-old, Benjamin Mode, who attended the Saturday evening show with his brother, mother and aunt.

Pacific region AFAP looks at child care, advocacy services

U.S. ARMY-PACIFIC

Public Affairs

FORD ISLAND — Delegates gathered from Alaska, Hawaii and Japan for the U.S. Army-Pacific's Army Family Action Plan, or AFAP, Conference, here, May 2-5.

AFAP encourages the Army family to identify issues and offer recommendations that can improve the quality of life for the Army community.

The week began with opening remarks from Jeannine Wiercinski, wife of Lt. Gen. Francis Wiercinski, commander, USARPAC, conveying the importance of the work that delegates would accomplish. She also talked about all the changes the Army has undergone since she first became an Army spouse.

Pacific Region garrison-level AFAP conferences had submitted nine issues for USARPAC action.

Delegates then identified which issues to forward to the Department of the Army AFAP Conference.

Delegates represented single Soldiers, married couples, active duty Soldiers, Army National Guard, retirees, wounded warriors, survivors, family members and Army civilians, said Capt. Alison Morse, program manager, AFAP, USARPAC.

During the USARPAC AFAP, delegates inspired robust discussions and brought to light concerns from across USARPAC.

Through their dedication and efforts, they addressed existing challenges and provided recommendations on how to resolve them, said Nancy Rice, well-being specialist, USARPAC.

The first issue addressed was recruiting and providing incentives for family child care, or FCC.

Delegates discussed homes to provide care for special needs children who may need attention beyond what center-based care provides.

Delegates recommended specialized training for FCC providers and incentives for those who receive training to care for special needs children.

The second issue involved expanding victim advocacy services to children under the age of 18.

Army regulations currently limit advocacy services to spouses only.

The recommendation is for victims under the age of 18 to be enrolled in the Defense Enrollment Eligibility Reporting System, or DEERS, and to be assigned a child victim advocate.

The third issue addressed family victim advocates for dependents 18 years and older.

As with the second issue, only spouses are authorized advocacy services, so the recommendation is to provide victims, who are enrolled in DEERS and older than age 18, with victim advocate services.

"The delegates worked diligently over the week, and I believe that their efforts will positively affect the quality of life for the total Army family," Morse said.

At the end of the conference, Lt. Gen. Wiercinski thanked participants for their hard work. He said issues will be forwarded for inclusion in the 2012 DA AFAP Conference.

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS — Members of the 8th Theater Sustainment Command performed a mock trial for students at Hale Kula Elementary School, here, May 16.

The theme of the trial was "The Big Bad Wolf v. Curly Pig," in which Curly Pig was accused of attempted wolf cooking.

The trial was presented to the fourth- and fifth-grade student body to educate students about the legal system and their civil rights.

"Today, we are here to educate the children and get them involved to make sure that they become more educated about our legal system," said Maj. C. Jack Marks, special projects coordinator, Office of Staff Judge Advocate, 8th TSC.

During the trial, lawyers presented valid arguments for the defendant, the wolf, and the accused, the pig.

After arguments were presented to the student body, students voted on whom they thought had been wrongfully accused.

"We are trying to bring a story that the kids are familiar with and trying to infuse the legal system into it," Marks said.

Even though different verdicts were given by the fourth- and fifth-grade classes, students understood the court process.

"We wanted to involve everyone — from teachers to principals, to educators, to retirees — and we wanted to educate not only children, but adults as well," Marks said. "It had them reflect on what they thought the legal system should be."

"The trial was important, because at a young age, you want children to start to understand that they have rights, and that it is important for them to celebrate those rights," said Capt. Erik Smith, operational law attorney, OSJA, 8th TSC.

"With this type of thing, the lawyers have to be very careful to bring the concept down to a level that the children can understand and digest."

Each year, the American Bar Association comes up with a different theme celebrating the country's commitment to the rule of law. This year's theme was "The Legacy of John Adam from Boston to Guantanamo."

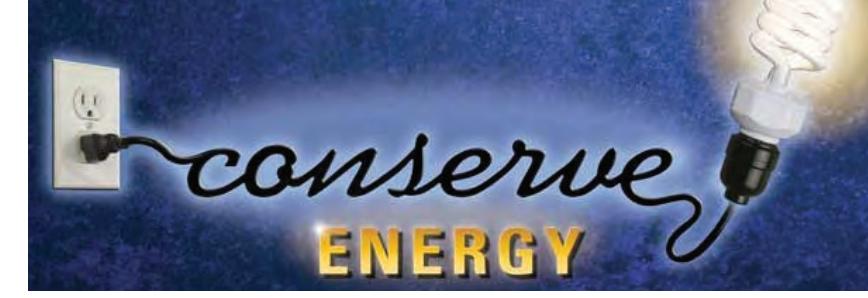

In essence, the Law Day observance recognizes due process rights under the U.S. Constitution, as well as the rights of the accused.

The mock trial aimed to teach students to stand up for what is right, even positions that may be unpopular.

"If only one thing sticks with the children, you can say that it was a success," Smith said.

Attorneys from OSJA, 8th TSC, assist fifth-grade students from Audra Bradshaw's class at Solomon Elementary School, as the class gets ready for a mock trial presentation, recently. Students also learned about the court system and how a case is adjudicated. Soldiers taught students that everyone in the U.S. has rights, and even someone like the Big Bad Wolf has the right to bring his grievances to a court of law.

Biggest Loser's motivation was starting a family, deployment

VANESSA LYNCH
News Editor

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS — With her husband deployed and starting a family on her mind, Rebecca Clark decided to hit the gym — hard.

After three months of exercise and a lifestyle overhaul, Clark lost 32 pounds, making her this year's Biggest Loser.

The Biggest Loser Contest, which ran January-April, is a program that is geared toward motivating individuals to live a healthier lifestyle. It provides motivation, healthy information and group activities.

This year, the contest was offered garrison-wide and boasted 95 participants who collectively lost more than 395 pounds.

"I started to notice a change in my body in mid-March," Clark said, who averaged a weight loss of 10 pounds, per month, during the contest. "My clothes were getting looser, I had more energy, and I was becoming more productive."

Since her husband deployed last year with the 2nd Brigade Combat Team, 25th Infantry Division, Clark changed her eating habits, added regular exercise to her routine and dropped 45 pounds, to date.

Although Clark's husband, Spc. Danny Clark, Company A, 225nd Bde. Support Battalion, 2nd BCT, is aware of how much weight she has lost, she has kept him in the dark about her transformation.

"He knows I participated in the Biggest Loser and that I lost weight, but he hasn't seen me since he came home for rest and recu-peration in December," Clark said. "I turned off the webcam and haven't sent any new pictures."

Clark will unveil her new body when her husband redeploys, here, next month.

"My advice to people who want to lose weight is to start slow and add on (different types of exercise) from there," Clark said, who made the transition from no exercise to walking to running. "Start with something you know you can do everyday, and stick with it."

Biggest Loser participants experienced initial, periodic and final weigh-ins throughout the three-month span of the program.

The targeted audience was people looking for an incentive program and motivation to lose weight and increase their physical activity," said Kalei Scoggins, special events coordinator, Directorate of Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation. "By using daily motivational newsletters, nutritional seminars and providing group exercise classes exclusively for Biggest Loser participants, participants were motivated to reach their weight-loss goals."

Registration was $15, and Blue Star Card patrons could enter for $10. During the contest, participants received motivational emails, special prize challenges and a six-month subscription to the fitness journal.

As the winner, Clark received a two-night stay at the Hale Koa Hotel, in Waikiki, along with a myriad of other prizes, but she said her biggest prize was losing the weight.
