SERVING THE HOME OF ARMY AVIATION SINCE 1956

VOLUME 74 • NUMBER 09 • MAY 1, 2024

With early morning preparation, and under the cover of darkness the aviators of the 101st Combat Aviation Brigade executed their Long-Range, Large-Scale Air Assault (L2A2), flying over 50 aircraft across multiple state lines to Fort Knox, KY. and Camp Atterbury, IN. before returning to Fort Campbell, KY. L2A2 allows the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) to rapidly concentrate highly lethal, low-signature, and cohesive combat forces from dispersed locations to overwhelm adversaries at a place and time of our choosing. L2A2 means delivering one brigade combat team over 500 nautical miles in one period of darkness, arriving as a cohesive element where the enemy least expects it, capable of fighting behind enemy lines for 14 or more days. U.S. ARMY

THIS IS OUR ARMY.

In medicine, there is a saying that “time is tissue.” What this means is that when a Soldier falls sick or injured on the battlefield, speed is often a critical factor as to whether they survive and return to the fight. A key part of enabling health care at the speed of war is predicting what units will need, and then getting the right equipment and supplies in the right place at the right time—without grossly overestimating or underestimating. Overestimations are unsustainable and wasteful. Underestimations leave units fatally shorthanded.

The soldier is looking out over a cityscape with a brown roof in the foreground and a red building in the background. A black helicopter is flying in the sky above the city.
