GEMS students return to halls of USAARL on Fort Rucker

After hosting its Gains in the Education of Mathematics and Science program virtually the past two years, the U.S. Army Aeromedical Research Laboratory welcomed youth from the surrounding areas into its halls once again this summer. “It was wonderful to have the students back on-site at USAARL and Fort Rucker,” said Loraine St. Onge, USAARL research administration manager and GEMS laboratory champion. “They engaged with a number of our scientists, engineers and employees, as well as people from across the installation and the community, which was phenomenal.” USAARL seamlessly transitioned back into in-person instruction and activities, St. Onge said, adding that the staff much prefers in-person GEMS to virtual.

Fort Rucker organizations team up to help military families

Fort Rucker organizations teamed up to host the Army Community Service Sensory Gala July 22 at the New Parent Support Program Building to spread information and bring families in the community together. “We had sensory exploration activities for the kids in both gross motor skills and fine motor skills, and then little types of materials for them to touch and feel,” explained Susan Hesser, Exceptional Family Member Program coordinator. “It allows them to use their different senses to comprehend things. It also leads to things like mathematics skills and applying scientific methods to figuring out how to piece things together.” The team that hosted the event was made up of representatives from ACS EFMP ...
