Fort Rucker Commissary parking lot receives new coating, fresh paint

The Fort Rucker Commissary parking lot received a new seal coating and fresh paint to clearly mark parking spaces in an effort to improve safety and visibility, and also extend its life using a technique only used a few other times on Fort Rucker. "In the past, Fort Rucker has used coal tar sealer, or repaved with asphalt on top of the existing parking lot asphalt," explained Trevor Marshall, Directorate of Public Works civil engineer. "The product we used is a polymer- and fiber-reinforced asphalt emulsion sealer."

Fort Rucker police officer earns Army Safety Guardian Award

A Fort Rucker police officer earned the U.S. Army Safety Guardian Award during a recognition ceremony in the Soldier Service Center Aug. 9. Richard Peterson received the award from Brig. Gen. Gene D. Meredith, U.S. Army Combat Readiness Center commanding general and director of Army Safety, for his actions May 6, according to the citation read at the ceremony. On that day, a concerned citizen informed Peterson of a vehicle traveling erratically toward the Enterprise Gate. He attempted to perform a traffic stop, but received no ...

Army officials welcome ideas on how to improve quality of life

The Army Family Action Plan has evolved with the rest of the Army into the digital age, and it's never been easier for people to voice their ideas on improving the quality of life of Soldiers, family members and the post community as a whole. "AFAP is a process where people in the Army or associated with the Army – it could be family members or retirees – can input suggestions on how to improve quality of life in the Army," explained Kent Thompson, Army Community Service director. In the past, people would see boxes in offices where they could submit their ideas on paper, he said, which unfortunately led to the AFAP boxes being used as complaint boxes. "And they were saying here's my complaint, but they weren't saying how to fix it," ...
