Expert seeks to help eliminate sexual assault

By Sara E. Martin Army Flier Staff Writer

While zero tolerance is the goal, the Army admits it still has work to do to combat sexual assault and harassment.

So, to educate its Soldiers and staff members with the best resources possible, Fort Rucker invited Russell Strand to speak to command teams, Sexual Harassment and Assault Response and Prevention personnel and other first responders during a seminar May 7 at Wings Chapel.

He will discuss achieving culture change to eliminate sexual assault, according to Sgt. 1st Class Lance Osborne, Fort Rucker SHARP program manager.

Russell Strand

As a DOD SME in the areas of spouse and child abuse, critical incident peer support, and sexual violence, and as the chief of the U.S. Army Military Police School behavioral sciences education and training division, he has much to expose on the topic.

According to seminar details, sex offenders thrive in a rape-prone, rape mythaccepting culture. The seminar will explore many societal myths and biases that enable sex offenders to operate successfully without suspicion and detection.

Strand will also discuss how they deceive, why they do what they do, and how people can peer through the fog and identify them.

Participants will be presented with up-to-date research, case studies and strategies on understanding sex offenders from a criminal justice viewpoint.

The session will inform attendees on typical offender typologies, how offenders groom and manipulate victims, coworkers, friends, relatives, neighbors and even professionals.

"Sexual assault victims don't witness sexual assault, they experience it, and the impact can be significant," said Strand. "We will explore what we now know about the neuroscience of sexual trauma and suggest better response

Strand expects attendees, upon completion of the seminar, to be able to identify rape myths that enable sex offenders to thrive, understand the impact and neuroscience of sexual assault, and how to define culture change and implement actions to create positive change.

"We will build on education, theories, promising best practices, and research to actively and intentionally change our culture to reduce — with a vision to eliminate — sexual assault in our society," he said.

Strand has an extensive resume that he has built in the last 40 years.

According to Strand's biography, he has established, developed, produced and conducted the U.S. Army Sexual Assault Investigations, Domestic Violence Intervention Training, Sexual Assault Investigations and Child Abuse Prevention and Investigation Techniques courses, and Fort Rucker paid tribute to its volunteers at The Landing April 23 with the theme "Changing Lives and the Community.

Volunteers are an invaluable resource to the community, said Col. Robert Doerer, U.S. Army Aviation Center of Excellence deputy commander. "I want to thank you all for coming today," Doerer said. "The Army offers a lot of great programs. Many of the programs are accomplished by these volunteers who will be recognized here today. Our volunteers are the key component in making the Army, Army

Strong and what the Army is today. "The ones who volunteer do not ask to be recognized," he added. "They do what they do to make a difference and this is just a small token to show them we do recognize what they do for the Army."

Aviation Branch Command Sgt. Maj. Eric Thom said volunteers at Fort Rucker are something special.

"I have been at Fort Rucker for a little over three weeks," Thom said. "Volunteers are the backbone of the installation. And, I must say, Fort Rucker definitely shows southern hospitality and I believe that is also because of our volunteers here. They all go out of their way to make you feel welcome and a part of the team here."

Darrell Hager, Directorate of Public Works Environmental Office Sustainability Program manager, said the expo is an important outreach effort.

"One factor that I hope everyone takes into consideration after today is, be aware of what you do, such as what you are buying to either clean your home or office, and what do you do with it all when you are done using it. Take time to be aware of what that product is doing to the environment."

PERSPECTIVE

Advocacy program established for victims

By Fort Rucker Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

The Secretary of the Army fully established a special victim's advocacy program Jan. 1 that entitles victims of sexual assault to legal representation from the moment the victim reports the crime through the conclusion of all legal proceedings against the alleged perpetrator.

This program is available to Soldiers, adult dependents of Soldiers, or other qualifying sexual assault victims who are affiliated with the military when the alleged perpetrator is a Soldier.

Immediately after victims report that they have been sexually assaulted, they may choose to have a special victim counsel assigned as their representative. SVCs are legal assistance attorneys (normally captains) with demonstrated experience, maturity and judgment.

Because the SVC represents the victim's interests, the SVC and victim maintain an attorney-client relationship. This means that all communications between the victim and SVC remain confidential unless the victim permits the SVC to reveal information in an effort to achieve the victim's goals related to the prosecution of the alleged perpetrator.

The specially trained SVC will guide a sexual assault victim through the various aspects of the legal process against the alleged perpetrator. For example, after a victim makes an allegation of sexual assault, the SVC may accompany the victim to interviews with criminal investigators.

The SVC may represent the victim's interests at pre-trial hearings, advocate for the victim when government prosecutors and commanders are deciding whether to move forward with a case, and protect the victim's rights during the court-martial itself. If the perpetrator is convicted and sentenced at court-martial, as part of the posttrial process, the convicted Soldier may later request a reduced sentence from the commanding general who convened the court-

Before deciding whether to grant such a request, however, the SVC may help the victim submit a victim-impact statement expressing the victim's preferences regarding the convicted Soldier's request for leniency.

Aside from providing support during the legal proceedings, as a legal assistance attorney, the SVC is available to provide the victim with a broad range of legal assistance services. For example, if a Soldier sexually assaults a dependent spouse, the victim may need legal assistance regarding legal separation, divorce proceedings, child custody or child support.

The SVC can advise the victim about each of those matters and recommend whether the victim should seek the services of a civilian attorney. SVCs may also connect victims with various resources on the installation, such as Army

Community Service or the health

The establishment of the special victim's advocacy program represents a significant increase in the rights of victims and their participation in the Army's criminal justice process. SVCs will zealously ensure that victims understand the process, the victim's best interests are always represented, and that victims are treated with fairness, dignity and respect.

Fort Rucker honors 10 retirees

By Jim Hughes

Command Information Officer

Hundreds of Soldiers, friends, Family members and co-workers saluted a combined 258 years of service to the country as nine Soldiers and one civil servant retired during a ceremony Friday at the U.S. Army Aviation Museum.

Col. Jayson Altieri, 110th Aviation Brigade commander, spoke at the event about the importance of honoring the nation's retiring veterans and civil servants.

"The men and women we are going to recognize here today have served their country honorably, and now they will take on the title of retired veterans or civil servants," he said. "In the history of the United States, retired veterans and civil servants have held a special place in history, and their importance was recognized by none other than the first commander in chief, Gen. of the Continental Army George Washington, who once said, 'the willingness of which young people are likely to serve in any war, no matter how justified, shall be directly proportional to how they perceive veterans of earlier wars were treated and appreciated by our nation.'

"It's important that ceremonies like this today recognize our civil servants, recognize our retired veterans in front of their friends, their Families and their peers ... because it does send a very special message to those who will come after us to serve," Altieri added.

The colonel also paid homage to the legacy left by retiring veterans and civil servants, taking umbrage with something a general officer once said to people suspect of the Army's transition and modernization, "This is not your grandfather's Army."

"While the statement may have been true, I would like to add the following caveat: were it not for those men and women who have served before us, both in civil service and as military veterans, we would not have the elite professional fighting force that the U.S. Army is today. And we owe them a round of applause," he said.

"The time that it will take today to recognize our fellow Americans and their Families the message is powerful, and it is the least we can do for these great Americans and their Families who we recognize today," he added.

Exchange pricing parity

Whether stationed at Fort Rucker or abroad, service members can expect to find the same, or very similar, prices at Army and Air Force Exchange Service facilities worldwide. Known as pricing parity, this practice ensures exchange prices are established centrally.

"While there may be some slight price differentiations that occur with items purchased locally overseas, per Department of Defense policy, the exchange doesn't increase prices in order to cover shipping or other higher operational costs," said Lorenzo Salgado, Fort Rucker Exchange general manager. "No matter where they are called to serve, it is our goal to bring Soldiers and their Families the same products, at the same cost."

Despite the exchange's efforts to price consistently, a few exceptions can occur.

"There may be some price differences between locations in the continental United States and overseas for categories such as gasoline, alcohol and tobacco," said Salgado. "These prices are set based on Department of Energy benchmarks, or local surveys, established by DOD directives."

Additionally, prices for some convenience and frequently purchased items may be lower at different locations based on local promotions or surveys. To ensure prices on these same items overseas are consistent with those service members would expect to see at home, overseas prices are set at the average surveyed CONUS price.

101st Airborne begins transitioning to BCT 2020

By Staff Sgt. Joel Salgado 101st Airborne Division Public Affairs

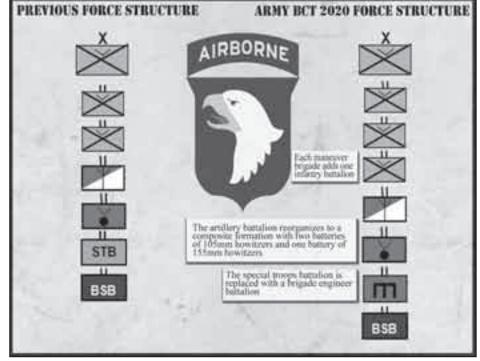

FORT CAMPBELL, Ky. — The 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) is beginning Operation Agile Eagle II, designed to localize and implement the larger Department of the Army-directed Brigade Combat Team 2020 initiative.

This overarching move is part of a plan that will reduce the overall strength of the Army in order to meet future requirements, officials said.

Much like the previous brigade modularization undertaken in the mid-2000s, they said Brigade Combat Team 2020 will add additional assets to the brigades and the division to increase their autonomy and enhance their abilities to meet future mission requirements.

"The addition of a third maneuver battalion in each brigade combat team adds to the ability of the division to respond to the needs of the Army with a more robust force to meet mission requirements," said Maj. Gen. James McConville, commander, 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault). "It also puts more combat Soldiers into units and reduces the overhead of staff."

Additionally, the brigades are standing up brigade engineer battalions, adding an increased range of ability to the commanders to address a wide range of mission challenges.

In addition to adding a third infantry battalion and a brigade engineer battalion to each BCT, the artillery units will also reorganize to composite battalions, which will each have two batteries of 105mm howitzers, and one battery of 155mm howitzers.

The division has already begun adapting to meet the new model by recently inactivating the 3rd Special Troops Battalion and reflagging it as the 21st Brigade Engineer Battalion and reorganizing the 3rd Battalion, 320th Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd BCT, to a composite artillery forma-

In mid-April, the 1st Special Troops Battalion of 1st Brigade Combat Team inactivated and transformed to the 326th Brigade Engineer Battalion. The 4th BCT was inactivated Friday as part of the realignment effort.

"As part of the Army's 2020 model, the division is reducing the 4th Brigade Combat Team, realigning its two infantry battalions under the 1st and 3rd Brigade Combat Teams, and distributing the remaining elements across the division," said McConville.

The division recently conducted Operation Golden Eagle, the first brigade-size air assault training operation in more than a decade at Fort Campbell that highlighted the capabilities of a brigade under the new BCT 2020 model.

In addition to increasing the division's ability to meet mission requirements, the reorganization also allows the history and lineage of some of the Army's most distinguished units to live on, McConville said.

"We are able to preserve the history and lineage of some of the Army's most highly decorated units with the retention of the 506th Infantry Regiment," he said.

Following the transition of the 1st and 2nd BCTs to the new BCT 2020 model and the activation of the division artillery, the division expects to meet the Army-directed goal of Sept. 30, 2015.

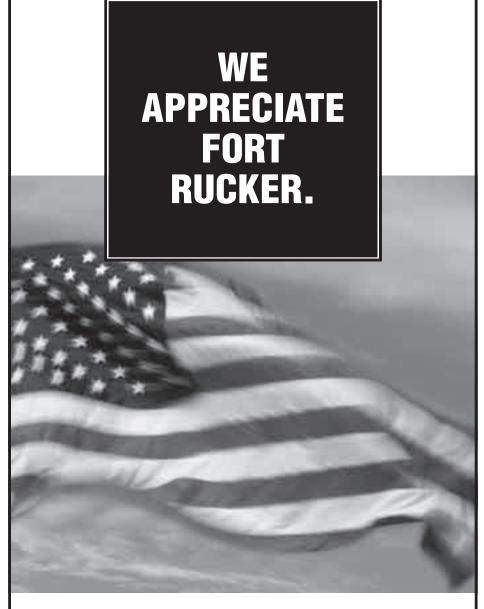

"The end state is that by 2015, we'll be completely transformed to three maneuver brigades," said CW5 Manny Vasquez, the lead planner for Agile Eagle II.

vehicle," said Terry Tradaway, SEAGD marketing representative for the Central Division. "When powered by natural gas, this vehicle gets around 41-42 miles per gallon. Of course, right now, the vehicle is a little (expensive), but over time the price will come down, and it will be the car of tomorrow. With a natural gas-powered vehicle, you just about cut the cost of fuel in half. These vehicles also generate fewer exhaust and greenhouse gas emissions than their gasoline or diesel-powered vehicles."

The Directorate of Family, Morale, Welfare and Recreation also had a booth set up during the event.

"We are here today to help spread the word about going paperless," said Nikki McKay, graphic design with DFMWR Marketing. "We publish a newsletter and magazine to keep everyone informed about activities taking place on post. We encourage everyone, instead of waiting to see the newsletter, you go paperless. This not only allows you to get information sooner, it also helps save the trees. Less paper used means less to recycle. You will not only be up-to-date on everything taking place in Fort Rucker, but you will be doing your part in protecting our environment."

And with summer time just around the corner, one vendor decided it was a good time to spread the word about insect repellent Mo's OBX Skeeter Beater.

"This product is 100-percent green and contains no DEET," said Worda James, representative with Mo's OBX Skeeter Beater. "This product protects individuals and pets from West Nile Virus, Yellow Fever, Lyme Disease, Dengue Fever, Malaria and other insect-borne diseases.

O THE STAG

Aviation Soldier joins Soldier Show

By Army Sgt. Christopher Calvert 1st Air Cavalry Brigade, 1st Cavalry Division

FORT SAM HOUSTON, Texas – With shaky legs and sweaty palms, the unmanned aircraft systems operator walked on stage, hoping to make the cut for the 2014 U.S. Army Soldier Show.

It was audition time, and it was Spc. Aurielle Polynice's turn to shine.

"I started freaking out – I always freak out at first," she said. "Then I go out on stage and I let it all go."

Polynice, with Company F, 2nd Battalion, 227th Aviation Regiment, 1st Air Cavalry

Brigade, 1st Cavalry Division, sang her way into becoming the only Fort Hood, Texas, Soldier in the U.S. Army Installation Management Command's 2014 "Stand Strong" Soldier Show during a live audition Feb. 15.

Now, Polynice and her 21 fellow cast members have headed out on the road for 60 performances scheduled at 37 garrisons across the United States.

Polynice said her journey began three years ago, when she witnessed the 75-minute Broadway-style production for the first time.

"When I saw it in 2011, I thought it was really, really cool," she said. "I wanted to see if I could make the cut. I wanted to represent my unit to the rest of the Army."

Earning the chance to audition live, however, took years of patience, she added.

"I did a prerecorded video audition for 2011's show, but was unable to put in my packet because of an upcoming deployment," added Polynice, who hails from Lawrenceville, Ga. "I wasn't going to let that stop me from trying again in the future."

She deployed to Afghanistan for a year in 2012 and returned with her sights still firmly set on becoming a member of the Soldier Show.

Soon after redeployment, Polynice sang Whitney Houston's "I Wanna Dance with Somebody" during 2012's Operation Rising Star, a vocal competition that showcases the talent of Soldiers and their Family members, and made it to the Top 10 before being voted off.

This only fueled her fire to becoming a better, more confident vocalist, she said.

"At the time, I was pretty excited just to make it to the Top 10," she said. "But soon after, I was already planning on trying out for the next one. I wanted to get better. I wanted

Flight medic braves elements to save lives

CAMP HUMPHREYS, South Korea -Somewhere in the world, patients are in need of vital medical attention. They may not have time to wait for an ambulance to be driven to their location due to time playing a huge factor between life and death.

Such emergencies require quick responses and, rest assured, there are people standing by to answer that call.

Sgt. Lisa A. Rodriguez, a flight medic stationed in South Korea, is one of those people. She serves her fellow Soldiers in need on the battlefield and at home.

Similar to her civilian counterparts, Rodriguez utilizes a helicopter to treat and transport the injured. In her case, she is part of a UH-60 Black Hawk helicopter crew. This aircraft is equipped with special crew and equipment ready to carry out rapid medical responses.

"It's our job to get a patient from the point of injury to the hospital within that golden hour," said Rodriguez. "We stabilize them along the way until we can get them into the hands of a doctor."

Rodriguez, a seven-year Army veteran currently serving with C Company, 3rd General Support Aviation Battalion, 2nd Combat Aviation Brigade, 2nd Infantry Division, and native of Raeford, N.C., wears many hats as a flight medic.

"Although I'm the primary medic on board our aircraft, I also perform crew duties alongside the crew chiefs who maintain the aircraft," Rodriguez said.

Those duties include assisting her team and ensuring safe movement of the

Aviators, Marines, Republic of Korea complete air assault

By Sgt. Nicole Hall

2nd Combat Aviation Brigade Public Affairs

SOUTH KOREA - Katchi Kapshida we go together – doesn't only apply to the friendship between the Republic of Korea and United States Army, it also describes the relationship between all U.S. military branches stationed in Korea.

Soldiers from 2nd Combat Aviation Brigade assisted the ROK and U.S. Marines in completing an air assault mission last month at a multi-purpose range complex in Northern South Korean.

Aviation Soldiers from 2nd Battalion (Assault), 2nd Aviation Regiment and 3rd General Support Aviation Battalion provided air support to more than 300 ROK and U.S. Marines on 25 UH-60 Black Hawks for the air assault training.

"In my three years with this unit, I have never been a part of such a large operation," said Richmond, Va., native Spc. Christopher E. Bodin, a UH-60 Black Hawk helicopter repairer, assigned to B Company, 2-2nd AVN. "Seeing 25 helicopters take off at one time was simply amazing, as well as a good show of force."

All battalions in 2nd CAB had a part in making the mission a successful one. Even though 2-2nd AVN had the lead, the brigade, as a whole, worked as a team to complete the mission.

"All Soldiers from the youngest private that is pumping fuel, gathering parts, or turning wrenches in support of the mistakes to support the war time mission," said Florence, Mo., native Command Sgt. Maj. James Johnson, 2-2nd AVN senior enlisted adviser.

Soldiers from E Co., 2-2nd AVN established a 10-point forward area refueling point on a runway for all helicopters involved in the assault. Pilots from 4th Aerial Reconnaissance Battalion (Attack), 2nd AVN flew AH-64 Apache helicopters, assisting Black Hawk pilots with "This type of training ensures that the ROK-U.S. alliance has faith in one another's ability to support and defend, should the armistice fail," said Johnson.

The 2-2nd AVN and other units in 2nd CAB conduct assault training various times throughout the year and at least biannually there are chances to conduct air assaults with other branches of the U.S. and ROK military.

Pilots from 2nd Battalion (Assault), 2nd Aviation Regiment and 3rd General Support Aviation Battalion flew in more than 300 Republic of Korea and U.S. Marines on 25 UH-60 Black Hawk helicopters for an air assault last month on the multipurpose range complex.

Stage: Soldier tackles nerves to join Soldier Show members have bonded during the weeks of preparation, she said.

"I'm excited to be on the road with the friends I've made here," she said. "After only a week, we've become a Family. The 12to 15-hour days we spend practicing our vocals and choreography have helped us all grow strong together as performers and Soldiers."

Sgt. Quentin Dorn, Army Entertainment production and stage manager, closely watched the team come together during the past few weeks. He has witnessed growth, he said, that has shown the team's ability to potentially put on the best production to date.

"There's something special about this group," said Dorn, an Albuquerque, N.M., native. "They've bonded extremely well together from the beginning and have fallen easily into their roles. It's amazing how well they work together to shine as one."

While mentoring and observing cast members, Dorn said, he has had a first-hand look at Polynice's improvements in both singing ability and confidence since her arrival at the installation.

"Specialist Polynice is doing great," he said. "She was a little shy when she first auditioned, but we've got her used to singing on stage. She now has the confidence needed to really shine."

Polynice said she is looking forward to showcasing her skills, one note and dance move at a time.

"It's been a blast, so far," she said. "I've learned a lot and am still learning every day. I look forward to performing for my fellow Soldiers, and I'm especially proud to represent my unit."

helicopter, which requires a constant visual of airspace during flights and landings.

Aside from her crew duties, Rodriguez must continuously train to maintain her medical certifications, which include basic life support, trauma life support, pediatric advanced life support, emergency medical services and advanced cardiovascular life support, to name a few. Rodriguez is required to re-certify annually and bi-annually, and in the end, it's all worth it to her.

"Coming to work every day is like a love affair. I enjoy my job and I enjoy training for my job," said Rodriguez. "When you love what you do, you strive to do it even better."

While she loves her job, Rodriguez says there are some parts of the job that are less desirable.

"The worst part of this job is the blood," said Rodriguez. "It doesn't bother me, but it does get messy and it gets everywhere, so there is a lot of cleanup involved."

Rodriguez also explained that treating children is also an emotionally difficult aspect that flight medics deal with.

As difficult as this job may sound, Rodriguez and her counterparts are very enthusiastic to carry out their mission with the only combat Aviation brigade on the peninsula.

If you see a yellow-striped UH-60 Black Hawk helicopter with the red cross symbol flying by, it just might be Rodriquez and her team of lifesavers.

Sgt. Lisa A. Rodriguez, a flight medic with C Company, 3rd General Support Aviation Battalion, 2nd Combat Aviation Brigade, 2nd Infantry Division, trains Pfc. Jeremy K. Williams, a UH-60 Black Hawk helicopter repairer, also assigned to the battalion, April 10 at Camp Humphreys, South Korea.

SCHOOL EVENTS FOCUS ON STEM

Students design inventions to make their lives easier

By Sara E. Martin Army Flier Staff Writer

Fort Rucker Elementary School is an institute that challenges the students to not only think outside the box, but also how to carry what they learn every day into the future.

As a Science, Technology, Engineering and Math school, FRES takes pride in charging into conducting experiments, finding innovative ways to educate its students and encouraging the children to be inventors, engineers and scientists, said FRES principal Vicki Gilmer.

"The students have been working on the engineering design process and have really enjoyed the hands-on approach to learning," she said. "So, to celebrate all their hard work, we held STEM Fest. Today is a celebration of all the thinking skills they developed this year."

STEM Fest was held Friday at the school where students were divided into six groups that rotated around six different learning stations. The learning stations included the invention convention, where a power truck from Pea River Electric Cooperative was on hand; a Zumba class station; a Google Doodle station; a hands-on station that included different activities, such as team cup stacking and building a zip line; a power safety class; and a star lab station.

But before the students began their trip across the school, Capt. Adam Samiof and CW3 Carl Miller, 1st Battalion, 13th Aviation Battalion, gave a demonstration of the RQ-11B Raven unmanned aircraft

"We came to talk about the Raven at the school because all unmanned aircraft systems envelope all STEM subjects. We want to show them that if STEM subjects

CW3 Carl Miller, B. Company, 1st Battalion, 13th Aviation Battalion, shows off the RQ-11B Raven to students at FRES as part of STEM Fest Friday.

Lilly Peijic, 5, and her father, WO1 Jiktor Peijic, a flight school student, tackled problem-solving tasks together in building a beanstalk during Fort Rucker Primary School's first Family STEM (Science, Technology, Engineering and Math) Night April 24. Using fairy tales as the centerpiece, the event focused on concrete learning and involved an integrated approach that combines all primary school curricula together. The students collaborated to design projects, tested the results and then made corrections.

Fort Rucker is home to many unique activities and events for its Families to enjoy, such as Girl's Night Out, Lake Fest and Thunder on Tholocco.

But officials are always looking to expand the possibilities of services Fort Rucker offers. The latest addition to spring up is the first-ever Fort Rucker Bridal Show scheduled for Sunday at The Landing's ballroom from 1-4:30 p.m.

"Everyone dreams of the perfect wedding, but planning one can be stressful. That's why I'm so excited about the Fort Rucker Bridal Show," said Janice Erdlitz, Directorate of Family, Morale, Welfare and Recreation marketing director. "Whether you are engaged, planning on getting engaged or just wishful, the show is going to be amazing."

Tickets are $5 a person today and tomorrow, and $8 at the door. There will be prizes and giveaways, and samples of wedding cakes, adult beverages and catered cuisine.

Attendees will also have the chance to speak with wedding professionals and see the latest bridal fashion trends and floral designs, said James Weaver, Five Star Catering installation sales manager.

"The Landing decided to host the bridal show to gain more exposure for DFMWR facilities as possible wedding venues or for potential off-site catering opportunities," he said. "So many people do not know what we can offer them."

Five Star Catering offers a wide range of services for future brides, continued Weaver. It can almost be a one-stop shop.

"We can provide several different menu options from sitdown plated meals to buffet-style meals, rental space for wedding receptions and ceremonies, and other rental items such as linens, dance floor and centerpieces."

There will be a full display of a wedding ceremony and wedding reception to showcase The Landing's ability to host any size wedding. There will also be a fashion show from three different wedding shops, samples of food, and a chance to see what various services or products are offered by surrounding businesses in the Wiregrass area, he said.

'We hope this is a fun, informational day to help start the initial (wedding) planning or to give some new, fresh ideas to enhance (couples') special day," he said. "This show is an opportunity to see what services Fort Rucker has to offer, and is a chance for people to (speak) one-on-one with vendors to customize their perfect wedding day."

There will be more than 30 vendors at the event, all specializing in different wedding aspects, including: photography, disc jockey services, rental items, floral, venues, bridal boutiques, jewelry, hotels and lodging, catering services, bakeries, health and beauty, event coordination, and more.

Getting to speak with local wedding professionals and seeing what Five Star Catering and The Landing have to offer isn't the only reason why soon-to-bebrides and grooms should want to attend.

"We will be giving away a Sandals honeymoon package at (the show). This package allows the winning couple to customize their romantic getaway to create the ultimate honeymoon experience," said Weaver. "This will include a choice from all Sandals Resort locations with no blackout dates. The package is for room, amenities and excursions." Those excursions include, but are not limited to, couples' massages, dinners on the beach, butler service and other upgrades.

Just because a wedding might not be in the future, officials encourage everyone to attend, even if it's just to fantasize.

"Even if you're not planning a wedding, it's still a fun event," said Erdlitz. "Is there really anything better than sampling wedding cake? But my favorite might be seeing all the wedding gowns during the fashion show. I plan on bringing a couple of my best friends and play bridefor-the-day."

And for those who are in the beginning stages of planning or those whose date is slowly approaching, the marketing director assures that the show will help with the stress of planning, and will offer inspiration as well as a wealth of information to couples.

"We have the top professionals in the business coming to the show," she said. "It would have been so helpful if I could have gone to a bridal show like this one with all the resources in one place. So take advantage!"

SUPPORTING VETS

JCS chairman makes case for veterans support

By Jim Garamone American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON – The chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff praised the members of the Dallasbased America's Future organization for their efforts on behalf of veterans, but said such efforts must continue.

Groups like America's Future will help define how the nation looks at its veterans, Army Gen. Martin E. Dempsey said April 24 during a speech to the group in Dallas.

"What image will this generation's veterans have?" the chairman asked. "The veterans themselves have less to say about who they are and how they will be remembered than you do, frankly."

Dempsey spoke about the images he has had of veterans from World War II and Korea, Vietnam and Desert Storm.

"Now we have the veterans of 12 years of conflict in an all-volunteer force, and how they will be remembered by history will be largely shaped by if America's people and businesses and communities either embrace them or convince them that their service was valued or was not," he said.

Dempsey brought up a lesson from history. Yesterday was the 77th anniversary of the German-Italian bombing of the Spanish village of Guernica.

"The idea was they were working on advancing this new technology related to aerial warfare," he said. "And the big idea on the part of the Axis was they would make resistance so outrageous, so costly to the Spanish, that they would just capitulate."

It didn't work that way, the chairman said, and Pablo Picasso captured it in the famous painting, "Guernica".

"Seventy-seven years later, technology keeps charging on and we learn to adapt with it," Dempsey said. "But we can't ever forget that what really matters in warfare are our young men and women who choose to serve, and put themselves in harm's way."

The chairman used a photo to make this point. He showed a shot from Afghanistan where a young squad leader is on the radio and on the left is a rifleman protecting him. He's obviously calling for something — aerial support, indirect fire, medical evacuation, guidance.

"Whatever it is he's asking for, he is going to get," Dempsey said. "That's what sets us apart from any other military in the world. That's a bond of trust we have with these kids, that when we put them in that position, that whatever they need, they'll get."

The chairman noted the Soldier is also wearing a wedding ring. This bond of trust goes all the way from the front edge of the battlefield to communities and cities across the United States. "That is a bond of trust, without which this all-volunteer force would not hold together," he said.

The bond of trust has to continue when service members and their Families come home as well, the chairman said. "When they come home, there is a sense of trust – not a sense of entitlement. It's not about them feeling entitled. They don't want a handout, they want a handshake. They just want a chance."

What communities like Dallas do to give these men and women that chance really is important, Dempsey said.

The chairman discussed the U.S. military in transition. The military is going through a transition after 12 years of war, Dempsey noted.

"This doesn't mean all conflict will magically cease, but we will have to rebalance to meet some enduring challenges and new challenges," he said. "We have to rekindle some skills that we've lost over the past 12 years."

And it must be done at a time of fiscal austerity, he added.

"We will manage our way through this, but the sooner we have some certainty, the sooner we gain some flexibility in the way we apply our budget, and the more time we are given to manage these changes then the better off we will be," he said. "As we go through this, we will continue to earn and re-earn your confidence, and the confidence of the American people."

"We will manage our way through this, but the sooner we have some certainty, the sooner we gain some flexibility in the way we apply our budget, and the more time we are

The bottom line for all Americans is to make the sacrifices these young men and women have made worth their blood, sweat and tears, the chairman said.

Dempsey told the audience that he has a box in his Pentagon office with the words, "Make It Matter," engraved on top. It contains the names and biographies of all those killed while under his command.

"We have an obligation to make the sacrifices of these young men and women who have fallen, but also those who have served, those who are suffering from wounds both physical and emotional — we have a genuine obligation to make their sacrifices matter," he said. "And one of the ways we make their sacrifices matter is by taking this task on board: the task of helping their teammates."

Dempsey spoke of visiting Brook Medical Center in San Antonio recently. There have been 1,645 amputees since the wars began in 2001. In previous wars, they would most likely have died. With medical advances 500 of them have returned to active duty, and 60 have gone back into combat.

"But there are more service members who have limbs so badly damaged that they contemplated having an amputation," the chairman said. Enter a public-private partnership. The joint venture developed a brace that allows these men and women to carry the weight and eliminates much of the pain.

"What it says to me, is we've got to keep learning," he said.

Paddle Jam organizers aim to set new world record

Become a part of history May 17 as Franklin County Tourist Development Council attempts to assemble the largest gathering of kayaks in history at the confluence of the Apalachicola River and the Apalachicola Bay in Florida.

During Forgotten Coast Paddle Jam 2014, which takes place May 16-18, event organizers will attempt to set a new Guinness Book World Record for the largest floating gathering of kayaks.

The current Guinness World Record was set September 24, 2011, when 1,902 kayaks and canoes assembled on Fourth Lake in Inlet, N.Y. On May 17, FCTDC will attempt to set a World Record on the Apalachicola River aiming to involve "raft up" more than 2,100 kayaks.

The event will take place at the confluence of the Apalachicola River and the Apalachicola Bay (100 yards north of the Apalachicola Bridge toward the junction of Scipio Creek and Apalachicola River.) Put-in locations will be spaced out at public landing and private marinas along the Apalachicola River. More than 2,100 kayaks will gather and be linked by boaters arm-in-arm or paddle-to-paddle and assembled for 30 seconds.

Paddle Jam is a festival celebrating the Forgotten Coast through paddle sports, music and food. Paddle Jam is a "fluid festival" with events happening at various locations in Apalachicola and St. George Island.

Paddle Jam will also showcase live, local music and local food.

Visitors can also attend lectures, visit local museums and parks, shop with the local vendors and stroll the historic district. Paddle Jam offers something for everyone and is for people who are passionate about life on the Forgotten Coast.

White House launches 1-stop shopping for vets seeking jobs

By Terri Moon Cronk American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON - First Lady Michelle Obama and Dr. Jill Biden, wife of Vice President Joe Biden, launched the Veterans Employment Center April 23, the first online one-stop shopping tool for veterans, transitioning service members and spouses in search of employment.

The announcement was made at a third-anniversary celebration for their Joining Forces initiative at Fort Campbell, Ky.

Joining Forces mobilizes all sectors of American society to support service members, veterans and their Families.

The Veterans Employment Center is designed to connect veterans and transitioning service members with employers and help translate military skills into the public- and private-sector civilian workforce.

"Our service members haven't always had the time or information they needed to prepare their resumes, to plot their career goals, to meet with employers and get the jobs they deserve. And that's simply not acceptable," the first lady said. "As my husband has said, when you've fought for this country around the world, you shouldn't have to fight for a job when you return home.

"Starting today," she continued, "every single service member, every veteran, and every military Family will have access to a new online tool that will revolutionize how you find jobs in both the public and private sectors."

The online tool is available at http://ebenefits. va.gov.

"Our service members transitioning to civilian life, as well as their spouses, deserve the resources they need to be successful," Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel said in a White House news release. "Through this effort, they are getting that help. Our troops and their spouses are proven leaders, highly skilled and hard working.

The center is the result of an interagency effort to improve, simplify and consolidate the existing array of employment resources for veterans, officials said. It also will provide a single, comprehensive database of resumes for employers who seek to leverage the skills and talents of veterans, service members and their spouses.

The new online resource is the first interagency tool to bring together a wealth of public and private job opportunities, a resumebuilder, military skills translator, and detailed career and training resourc-

"We can continue to honor and show our appreciation for the dedicated and heroic service of America's veterans by ensuring that they have every opportunito this great nation as federal civilian employees," Archuleta said. "The Veterans Employment Center helps us honor these men and women by making employment opportunities available when our servicemen and women lay down their uniforms."

event, Biden noted the success of the Military Spouse Employment Partnership, which began in June 2011 with fewer than 60 companies. Today, she said, the partnership has 228 partner employers, more than 1.8 million jobs posted on the MSEP Career Portal and more than 60,000 military spouse hires to its credit.

HOLE-IN-ONE

Tournament tees up funds for 'good cause'

By Sara E. Martin Army Flier Staff Writer

More than 75 people teed off together Friday for the 24th annual Army Aviation Center Federal Credit Union Golf Tournament to benefit Army Emergency Relief.

Soldiers and civilians alike showed their support for the program, many of whom enjoyed the company just as much as the cause

"This is such a good cause, I always like to play it with a group of friends. This program really serves our Soldiers and their Families, and me and my husband always do what we can to support them," said tournament player Kris Laster. "I love the course, as well. It's a great practice facility because it is a good challenge."

Col. Stuart J. McRae, garrison commander, kicked-off the tournament by encouraging participants to get the word out to others about the benefits of AER.

"Last year, this tournament raised around $15,000, and we hope to match that this year. Last year we gave out $408,000 in loans, grants and scholarships to local Families," he said. "We need everyone's support to make sure this year's campaign is a success. You guys can take pride knowing this is going to a good, local cause."

Fort Rucker gives out more money to Soldiers than it gives in to the program, said Command Sgt. Maj. Buford E. Noland, garrison command sergeant major.

We need everyone's support to make sure this year's campaign is a success"

— COL. STUART J. MCRAE

"Just a few weeks ago, I got a call from a sergeant major in Korea. He told me that one of our Soldiers had just moved to his new unit in Korea. Well, he had planned on retiring in June before he left, so he and his wife bought a local 100-year-old farm house and that was going to be their retirement place when he returned from Korea," he said. "Well, just a few weeks ago that house burned to the ground.

"The wife and children were left with nothing," he continued. "But we have been able to help with the assistance of AER. The Family is now set up with temporary quarters, and has food vouchers and a grant to help set them up for success."

Each year, the tournament raises around $15,000, which Lisa Hales, AACFCU vice president of marketing, said is 100 percent of the proceeds.

"We are a credit union that started in 1966 with seven Soldiers from Fort Rucker. So, it has always been very important to us to support Fort Rucker in any way we can," she said.

Every year the sponsor offers the chance for participants to win a new car. This year the hole was Red No. 8. In the entire 24 years, only one person has ever won the car. There was no winner this year, either.

"The golfers that come out always have a great time. The camaraderie between everyone during the lunch afterwards is good to see," said Hales. "It's obvious that everyone has a good time together and supports each other, even though it is a competition."

Ergonomics meets munitions – keeping workers safe

By Jane Gervasoni U.S. Army Public Health Command

A quality work environment is a collaborative effort to keep workers safe and healthy. In a facility like the Anniston Munitions Center, Ala., many factors influence the work environment and can be modified to improve worker wellbeing.

U.S. Army Public Health Command ergonomists went to Anniston in January to survey facilities, evaluate work processes, and provide training to local industrial hygienists and safety personnel – all to help enhance the working environment at the facility.

By looking at the tools; physical activities, such as bending or lifting that affect the body; and environmental factors such as noise and lighting that might affect hearing, vision or comfort, ergonomists can suggest modifications that enhance worker health worker health.

While John Pentikis, USAPHC Army Institute of Public Health ergonomist and team leader, taught ergonomics principles to the industrial hygienists and safety office personnel, ergonomists Kevin Purcell, AIPH, and Tricia Salzar, Public Health Command Region-South, assessed industrial and administrative areas around the munitions center.

"These types of missions help installation personnel learn the ergonomic principles needed to run their own basic program at the installation level," explained Pentikis. "By combining assessments with training, the installation gets a chance to see how we (ergonomists) go through a facility reviewing processes and determining areas of concern."

"It was great that I was able to be part of this assessment since the facility is located in my area of responsibility," said Salzar. "I began to develop a relationship with the individuals at the installation, which helps them feel more comfortable asking questions and getting help when needed. They also know they can call me for assistance as they develop their local ergonomics program."

A worksite assessment provides the "ergonomic big picture" of the workplace and is an integral part of an installation's ergonomics program, according to Purcell. An assessment involves observations and discussions with supervisors and employees to determine the types of work done in the facility, and any specific concerns they may have.

"In the case of Anniston," said Purcell, "we looked at a wide range of facilities

Army first-aid kits include new eye shield

By Chanel S. Weaver U.S. Army Public Health Command

ABERDEEN PROVING GROUND, Md. — Soldiers whose eyes are injured during combat have a better chance of returning to duty with their vision intact due to some revisions in the Army's first-aid kit.

The rigid eye shield was added as a component to the Army's "Individual First-Aid Kit II," which was distributed to the first Army units in the fall of 2013.

When properly worn, the shields can protect a service member's eye from further damage after an initial eye injury is sustained during combat operations.

"We've learned a lot about eye injuries in the field over the past decade," said Lt. Col. Jeffrey Autrey, program manager of the Tri-Service Vision Conservation and Readiness Program at the U.S. Army Public Health Command. "We know more about the common causes, prevention measures and effective techniques for treatment."

In the past, service members may have treated eye injuries by wrapping the head with a bandage and applying pressure to the wounded eye.

But this method of preserving the eye is not optimal eye care, according to Autrey.

"A person's eye can become further damaged if too much pressure is applied," he said.

That's why Army first-aid kits are now including the eye

"If a service member's eye is injured during combat, the rigid eye shield should be placed over the injured eye and secured with tape," said Cmdr. Kevin McGowan, Navy program manager in the TSCVRP who assists Autrey with surveillance of eye injuries to military members.

"This action will ensure that no other foreign debris comes into contact with the eye, and will preserve the eye until a medical expert can give it further attention."

According to data from the Armed Forces Health Surveillance Center, during the years 2001 to 2010, between five and 22 percent of all Department of Defense injuries were a result of ocular trauma.

"It's a worthy investment to add the eye shields to first-aid kits," said Autrey.

The USAPHC's TSVCRP incorporated instructions on how to use the new eye shield in its recent two-day Vision Conservation and Readiness Course. Autrey said the new eye shields are meant as a supplement to current Military Combat Eye Protection, not as a substitute for proper eye protection.

"Research still shows that most eye injuries can be prevented by wearing eye protection from the Authorized Protective Eyewear List," said Autrey.

Autrey said that it has been rewarding to collaborate with the DOD on getting the word out about the new eye shields being incorporated into Army first-aid kits. He knows that that the shields will be of utmost importance to troops who are deployed downrange.

"Of all the body's senses, most people value their sense of sight the most," said Autrey. "That's why we're not only looking for innovative ways to preserve life and limb, but, specifically, eyesight."

The eye shields should be a part of all DOD joint-service first-aid kits by the fall.

including offices, inventory buildings, inspection areas, receiving and shipping facilities, a wood shop and unpacking areas."

Each area offers unique ergonomic challenges to employees and opportunities to recommend improvements.

Much of the work done at Anniston involves unpacking, moving and disposing of unused and outdated military shells, rockets, missiles and similar explosive material. Because of the concerns about static electricity, grounded metal plates are placed in work areas, according to Purcell. The metal plates create a hard work surface, in turn creating an ergonomic hazard that needs to be mitigated.

"One of our suggestions was to replace the metal plates with grounded rubber mats so that workers would not have to stand on the unyielding metal plates," he explained. "The use of anti-fatigue mats would be a less expensive, 'quick fix' for those who stand in place much of the day."

"I think these types of quick fixes go a long way towards fostering support for larger, more expensive projects. In addition, by modifying a small portion of the task, we can hopefully reduce the stress and strain on the employee, which in turn usually makes them wonderful advocates for ergonomics," Salzar said.

"We make suggestions to make the workplace fit the worker," said Purcell. "We talk with the people who do the work to get an understanding of how they do their work."

Much of the work at Anniston begins at the loading docks. Containers of materiel to be destroyed are shipped in Army trailers that have rollers, but Purcell noted that the loading docks were at a bad angle that did not facilitate easy loading and offloading of the trucks.

The ergonomic team's suggestions for improvement included pouring a new concrete pad to better facilitate loading and unloading and the use of a winch on a fork lift instead of manually pulling heavy containers from the trucks.

Workers had their own suggestions to improve other processes. They included putting wheels on tables used to move rockets and other large projectiles, and the fabrication of special stands that are sized to fit their jobs.

"Ergonomics, safety and good business practices overlap when we look at the processes at an installation," said Purcell. "Most of the time they all go hand-in-hand to protect the workers and increase production.

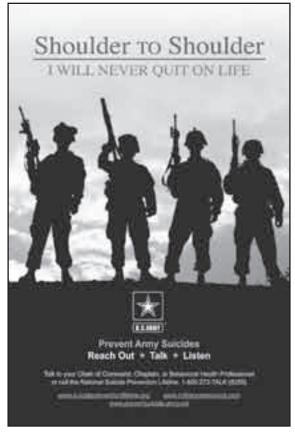

"We were very impressed with the ingenuity of the workers in the facilities who had modified equipment or the environment to make their work easier and safer," said Purcell. "When we complimented their changes, we explained how they had applied ergonomic principles to their work environment."

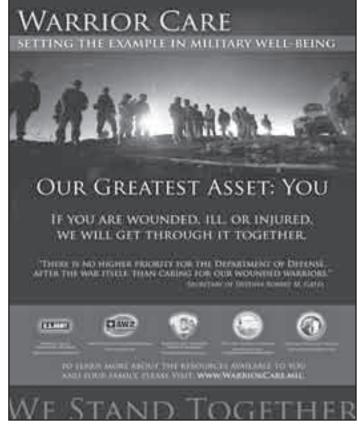

"We left the munitions center having provided ergonomic training to both management and line-workers, as well as information on how to establish their own ergonomics program," according to Pentikis.

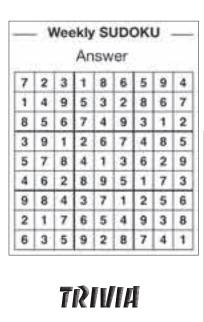

"The ergonomic training was very informative for the industrial hygiene, safety and others who attended," said Anthony Burdell, deputy to the commander at Anniston.

"During the ergonomic survey the auditors also provided ergonomic information to our workforce to include how office equipment should be set up for each individual," according to Burdell. "They also instructed ANMC team members how to get ergonomic information from the Public Health Command website. The visit was very beneficial for the ANMC Team."
