From scientists and politicians to human rights activists and countless Average Joes, it's taken a lot of innovation, sacrifice and hard work to get the United States of America from the first shots of revolution to where it stands today.

But one group's members can argue, and many would agree, that without them and all that they did, the rest wouldn't have happened.

That group, U.S. military veterans, took center stage at Fort Rucker during the post's Veterans Day ceremony Friday, which featured veterans from all services and every conflict dating from World War II to today; aircraft from the Coast Guard, Air Force, Army and a vintage AH-1 Cobra; and Maj. Gen. Michael D. Lundy, U.S. Army Aviation Center of Excellence and Fort Rucker commanding general serving as the speaker.

"Since the American Revolution in 1775, men and women have answered the call of duty and proudly served this great country in the armed services. Each and every one of them are now veterans," he said. "Serving a higher purpose and something bigger than themselves, veterans have endured great personal sacrifice and danger while abiding by their solemn oath to defend the United States of America against all enemies, foreign and domestic.

"From the early days of the revolution to the American Civil War to the two World Wars, Korea, Vietnam, and our most recent conflicts in Iraq and Afghanistan, veterans from across this great country have stood strong to preserve the ideals of freedom and liberty, while always maintaining the trust of the people that they serve — the American people," Lundy continued.

"All (the veterans) that we honor today served something bigger than themselves: a profession — the profession of arms," the general said. "A profession that spans almost 2 ½ centuries back to the genesis of our great nation. A profession that is bound by an oath to support and defend the Constitution and obey the orders of the president of the United States. A profession built on an ethos of trust — trust that is built on personal character, personal abilities, personal strength and personal word. A profession that is underpinned by the shared values of loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity and personal courage. A profession that recognized that our veterans are duty bound to uphold their oath, embody the values of our nation, and founded in ethos there is no greater responsibility or honor than to protect those that they serve — our citizens."

He added that today's veterans stand as a testament to that ethos, and clearly demonstrate "remarkable personal courage and loyalty to the nation."

"I'm honored today to recognize these veterans and their families, and especially our Gold Star families who are with us here today," he said. "It is difficult to find the right words to truly express how important each of you are to our nation and to her people. What you have done and continue to do is important, and words will never be enough to fully capture the impact you've had on our nation and our allies around the world.

"You made this world better. You kept our nation safe. You helped our friends in their darkest hours. And you always stood strong in the face of great peril," Lundy added. "But most importantly, you each left a legacy in the veterans that followed

AFAP gives people voice in quality of life improvement

By Nathan Pfau
Army Flier Staff Writer

Fort Rucker leadership strives to make sure Soldiers, family members and civilians are well taken care of, and the Army makes sure it provides a forum where issues can be heard and resolved at the appropriate level.

The installation held the Army Family Action Plan Conference Nov. 5 and 6 at Wings Chapel to give a voice to the people of Fort Rucker, and get their issues and concerns heard and into the hands of Army leadership, said Rick Kohl, acting Army Family Action Plan coordinator.

"This is a small, but dedicated group, and in 31 years (AFAP) has made a difference in the structure of the Army," he said during the conference. "The AFAP process offers the unique ability for somebody who is experiencing something ... and they can voice concern and offer a resolution in a way that is unlike anything else the Army has to offer."

Russell B. Hall, Fort Rucker deputy to the commanding general, was on hand at the opening of the conference to offer words of encouragement and remind people why AFAP is necessary.

"It really is about the grass roots of the total Army family structure, meaning Soldiers, civilians, families, retirees, our teams, everyone," he said. "You are the experts at family quality of life, and you bring that to bear here and that's why it's important that we get these ideas.

"You are my experts, so don't hold things back," he continued. "A lot of people will think that this is my rock to bear, but don't work it that way. Embody it as a piece

Education week highlights services

By Jay Mann
Fort Rucker Public Affairs

American Education Week runs Monday-Nov. 21 and the Army Continuing Education System wants Soldiers to know "Army Strong, Education Stronger."

"American Education Week is a chance for us to highlight the importance of education to our Soldiers," said Henry "Chick" Eagle, supervisory education services specialist. "We believe that education makes us all stronger."

The Fort Rucker Education Center will host three days of events focused on helping Soldiers and family members obtain the education that will put them on the road to future success.

Tuesday, from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. in Bldg. 4502, Capt Keith A. Stampley, Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University alumni, will share his experience completing an education while meeting military and family responsibilities. Lunch will be provided, so people planning on attending need to RSVP to 598-6232, as there will be limited seating.

Wednesday, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. in Bldg. 5700, many Fort Rucker organizations and academic institution representatives will have information tables about their programs. They will discuss what educational, financial aid, guidance counseling and other programs are available.

Nov. 20, from 5:30-7:30 p.m. in Bldg. 4502, Troy University will host an open house. Soldiers, family and friends are invited to the Fort Rucker Education Center to meet with ACES and Troy staff members to learn about furthering their education goals.

"Working on your education while you are still in the military is extremely important," said Eagle. "You will eventually need some credentials when you finally separate from the military."

ACES works closely with the Soldier for Life program to help Soldiers continue their educational goals throughout their careers.

"Education helps you develop those credentials as you progress through your career in the military," added

Eagle. "A lot of Soldiers come into the Army specifically for the education benefits."

As part of newcomers briefs, Soldiers can find an ACES Educational Flow at the education center that lines up with the Soldier For Life career progression. "Every Soldier needs to take advantage of this," Eagle said.

"When Soldiers begin their Army careers, they start with assessments, their (Military Occupational Specialty), then they get their associate's degree, bachelor's degree and master's degree," said Eagle. "Then you have got the credentials, the experience in the Army and you are fully marketable when you leave the military.

"Civilian education can add to your promotion points while you are in the Army, as well," he added. "This would make you more attractive for the next promotion."

"Especially now with the competition in the military due to downsizing for retention and school availability," said Randy McNally,

Army Medicine: Beware of emotional eating

By Capt. Candice Hebert
U.S. Army Public Health
Command

"I have a deadline to meet — I am working long hours and feel overwhelmed. I usually eat something sweet to cope with the stress."

"My wife and I are having problems in our marriage. I stay up late and eat — usually pizza — it helps me cope with the anxious feelings."

"I've been feeling lonely lately, so I sit in front of the TV with potato chips or some other type of junk food to help with the sadness."

"When I am feeling depressed I am constantly hungry."

At one time or another, most of us have turned to food to cure our emotional troubles or make ourselves feel better. In essence, we are feeding our emotions. However, problems arise when eating becomes the only approach we use to manage emotions — especially if the foods we choose to eat are unhealthy or the amounts are excessive.

If you are experiencing persistent depressed mood for more than two weeks, see a healthcare provider.

The connection between serotonin and mood

What is the connection between food and mood? A neurotransmitter, a mood hormone, called serotonin. When serotonin levels are low, we feel sad, and when elevated, we feel happy. Serotonin is known to be in many antidepressants such as Prozac and Zoloft. However, what most people don't know is that the majority of our serotonin cells are in our digestive systems, not our brains. Thus, diet plays a big role in our serotonin levels.

Carbohydrate-rich foods have a big effect on our serotonin levels. When we are sad or upset (low serotonin levels), we crave foods high in carbohydrates to feel better. It makes sense then why people who are feeling down eat more junk food.

In addition, the connection between serotonin and food is noticeable in the depressive feelings experienced after several weeks of a high-protein, low-carbohydrate diet. The effect of dieting and low carbohydrate intake decreases our serotonin levels and causes us to feel down. This, in turn, may lead dieters to crave carbohydrate-rich foods to improve their mood, which usually results in overeating and contributes to regaining weight.

The behavior connection

When you form the habit of feeding an emotion, you put off learning skills to manage your emotions. Here are some tips to help break the habit of feeding your emotions.

- Identify your triggers for emotional eating.
- Take notice of when you feel stressed, overwhelmed, lonely, sad or anxious.
- Instead of searching for something to eat, do an enjoyable non-food related activity. Go outside, take a walk, or talk to a friend, family member or coworker.

• If you find that your emotional eating is out of control, enlist the help of a qualified professional such as a registered dietitian and/or a behavioral health specialist (such as a social worker, therapist or psychologist).

Keep in mind that it is OK to eat the foods you enjoy in moderation. If you find that you absolutely have to have a favorite food, like chocolate, take the time to enjoy it. Engage the food with all your senses — touch it, smell it, chew it slowly and savor the taste. You will find that you are more fulfilled with a small amount versus the whole package.

In addition, develop the habit of reaching for healthy serotonin-boosting snacks such as nuts, fruits and vegetables.

Summing up

Understanding what we eat and how our mood relates to our behavior are important ways to help improve our mood. A well-balanced diet and engaging in healthy activities can keep us feeling great more often.

THIS MONTH IN ARMY AVIATION HISTORY

This month we're highlighting the November/December 1989 issue.

Time to Sound the Trumpets

At Fort Campbell, Kentucky, in broad daylight, one man was responsible for performing an act that resulted in a number of Army helicopters being rendered non-flyable. Moving purposefully from one aircraft to another, this single individual expertly and methodically cut electrical wires, damaged hydraulic lines, punched holes in fuel tanks and inflicted similar damage to structural members. And what's more, he got away with it.

NCO of the Year, 1969-1989

Twenty years ago this past January,

Sgt. 1st Class Rodney J.T. Yano made the ultimate sacrifice for which he was later posthumously awarded the Medal of Honor. His actions, which demonstrated courage, loyalty and profound concern for the welfare of his fellow Soldiers, were a shining example to the noncommissioned officer corps and reflected many of the tenets of the NCO Creed.

NCOs Above the Best Take the Challenge

The Aviation noncommissioned officer has one of the most indispensable, critically demanding careers in the U.S. Army. The NCO must have a thorough knowledge of basic Soldier skills and be technically proficient in Aviation.

Brother Soldier, I Trust You With My Life

First and foremost, one must be able to rely on his fellow Soldiers. The term "Soldiers" includes all ranks and both sexes. This message may seem obvious and a strange one requiring discussion. But, too often in today's Army I find little or no understanding of this basic tenet of our profession. Being able to rely on one's fellow Soldiers depends on mutual trust.

TRADOC CSM picked to be next SMA

By Lisa Ferdinando
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The senior enlisted adviser of U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command has been selected to be the next sergeant major of the Army.

Secretary of the Army John McHugh and Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Ray Odierno announced Nov. 3 that Command Sgt. Maj. Daniel A. Dailey will be the 15th sergeant major of the Army. He will assume the Army's highest enlisted office after Sgt. Maj. of the Army Raymond F. Chandler III retires at the end of January.

"We have the utmost confidence in Command Sgt. Maj. Dailey and look forward to having him join our leadership team," said McHugh. "His experience, leadership, devotion to Soldiers and commitment to our Army make him especially suited to assume this important duty, one that Sgt. Maj. of the Army Chandler has masterfully performed for the last four years."

Dailey, who enlisted 1989, is an infantryman and combat veteran who served four deployments in Operation Iraqi Freedom and one in support of Operation Desert Storm.

He said he is humbled by the choice.

"It's every Soldier's dream — it should be every Soldier's dream — to someday at least have the opportunity to be the sergeant major of the Army," he said.

He told Odierno that he never "fathomed when I was a young Soldier that I'd ever be in this office receiving this type of recognition."

Dailey holds a Bachelor of Science degree (summa cum laude) from Excelsior College.

He said he and his wife of more than 20 years, Holly Dailey, are dedicated to Soldiers and their families.

"This requires a commitment well beyond any that I've ever done before and it requires leadership that, frankly, Soldiers need to be able to see every day," he said. "I owe it back to our Soldiers. I have a responsibility — an awesome responsibility — that is not looked upon lightly by the Soldiers of the United States Army."

There is a lot of work to do and it is a big responsibility, he said, in carrying on the traditions of Chandler, and in meeting Odierno's expectations and strategic goals.

"The Soldiers of this great Army deserve leadership and the highest caliber of leadership we can offer," he said.

The Army has faced challenging times and there are more challenges ahead, he said.

"What I can assure you is that we are doing the right things. I have been intimately familiar with the policy, procedures and direction that our leadership of the Army is taking us. I truly believe it is the right direction," he said.

Lead by example

Dailey said he is a standards-based sergeant major who is approachable, mission-focused, who takes on challenging assignments, strives for the best, and places the highest priority on physical fitness for himself and his Soldiers.

"It is our job every single day to represent the best we possibly can, not only for us, for our peers and for our superiors, but most importantly for the people of America," he said. "I'm truly excited as we move forward because I truly believe that we are heading in the right direction in the future."

He credits his mentors for challenging him and helping him make the right decisions.

"I'm the benefactor of excellent leadership," he said.

Engaged leadership is important, he said. Good leaders know their Soldiers and their families — it's important that Soldiers have a balance between work and home life, he said.

"I would have never made it to where I am today without my family, and that requires balance between being a Soldier, being a father and a husband," he said.

Soldiers should not be afraid to reach out for help if they are facing problems, he said.

"I think we're in a time in the Army where we've really gotten rid of that stigma," he said. "What is great is that we have leaders who say that they need help, and it really shows them young Soldiers that you truly can be successful even though you've asked for help."

It is a great responsibility to be charged with the safety and wellness of Soldiers you lead, he said.

"Somebody has trusted me with their lives," he said. "I take that very seriously, the four times that I deployed to combat, very seriously. It's my responsibility to bring them home — every single one of them.

"That's the ultimate responsibility we have, not just to our Soldiers but to the mothers and fathers of this great nation," he said. "I think they would expect us to treat them like their own children."

Army tradition

Dailey, who is from the small, northeastern Pennsylvania town of Palmerton, saw the military as an opportunity for growth and experience.

"I knew that I wanted to join the Army at a young age," he said. "My father had served in the military, his brothers had served in the military, both of my grandfathers had service during World War II, and my oldest brother before me made the choice to serve in the United States Army. It had a big impact on me."

He signed up for the delayed entry program the year before he graduated high school.

"My family was in complete support of it," he said. "I was 16 years old when I made the choice to join the military."

During his first tour, which was in Germany, he realized that he wanted to make a career of the Army.

"Originally I only came in for a short period of time, but the Army grew on me, and I said 'I want to do this thing for the rest of my life,'" he said.

However, a life in the military is not easy with multiple deployments, separation from loved ones and tough assignments, he said.

He persevered with "hard work, discipline, and dedication," and the various leadership positions throughout his career helped prepare him for his next assignment, he said.

"The great thing about the United States Army is that a young kid from northeastern Pennsylvania in the middle of nowhere can come in here and become the sergeant major of the Army," he said.

Family bonds

"My time with my family is sacred," said Dailey, who, like many Soldiers, has been separated from family due to long deployments.

Being away from his wife and son was difficult, but "we took one day at a time."

Holly, his "hometown sweetheart," became active in family readiness groups, and the support of those groups helped both Dailey and his wife cope.

"Getting through each one of those deployments, even four of them back-to-back, some as long as 15 months, was working with those families and sharing the challenges that are associated with being deployed, especially multiple deployments for extended periods of time," he said.

Biography

Dailey enlisted in the Army in 1989, and attended Basic Training and Advanced Individual Training as an 11B (Infantryman) at Fort Benning, Georgia.

His initial assignment was to the 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Infantry Division, Schweinfurt, Germany, where he served as a radio telephone operator and rifleman, and then participated in Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

After returning from Desert Storm, he remained in the 15th Infantry Regiment and was promoted to the rank of sergeant, where he served as both a team leader and a commander's gunner, until 1993.

Upon completing his tour in Germany, he was reassigned to the 1st Battalion, 16th Infantry Regiment, at Fort Riley, Kansas, where he was promoted to the rank of staff sergeant and served as a Bradley commander and a battalion master gunner, from 1993 to 1996.

He was then reassigned to the 2nd Battalion, 9th Infantry Regiment, at Camp Casey, Korea, where he served as a section leader and was later promoted to sergeant first class. After completing his 12-month tour in Korea, in 1997, he was reassigned to the 2nd Battalion, 7th Infantry Regiment, Fort Stewart, Georgia.

While at Fort Stewart, he served as the Primary Leadership Development Course senior instructor, and later as a platoon sergeant in the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry Regiment, from 1998 to 2000. In 2001, he was reassigned to the 1st Battalion, 12th Infantry Regiment, Fort Carson, Colorado, where he served as a platoon sergeant.

While at Fort Carson, he was promoted to first sergeant and assumed responsibility of Charlie Company, 1st Battalion, 8th Infantry Regiment and later Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 8th Infantry, where he deployed his company in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom, from 2003 to 2004.

In 2003, he was selected to attend the United States Army Sergeants Major Academy and was promoted to the rank of command sergeant major, in August of 2004.

Dailey was then reassigned back to the 1st Battalion, 8th Infantry Regiment, where he served as the battalion senior enlisted adviser, and completed another combat tour in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom, from 2005 to 2006.

In March 2007, he was selected to serve as the 3rd Brigade Combat Team, 4th Infantry Division senior enlisted adviser, where he deployed in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom, from 2007 to 2009.

In March 2009, he was selected as the 4th Infantry Division (Mechanized) senior enlisted adviser, where he served as both the top enlisted leader of Fort Carson, Colorado, and U.S. Division-North, Iraq in Support of Operation New Dawn, during his fifth combat deployment.

In August 2011, Dailey was selected to serve as the senior enlisted adviser of United States Army Training and Doctrine Command.

His military and civilian education includes the Primary Leadership Development Course, the Basic Non-commissioned Officer's Course, the Bradley Master Gunner Course, the Advanced Non-commissioned Officer's Course, the First Sergeants Course, the Force Management Course and the Keystone Course. He is a graduate of class 54 of the U.S. Army Sergeants Major Academy and the Command Sergeants Major Course. He also has a bachelor's of science degree (summa cum laude) from Excelsior College.

Dailey's awards include the Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star Medal with "V" device, the Bronze Star Medal (3rd award), the Meritorious Service Medal (3rd award), the Army Commendation Medal (7th award), the Army Achievement Medal (10th award), the Good Conduct Medal (7th award), the National Defense Service Medal (2nd award), the South West Asia Service Medal (one bronze service star), the Iraq Campaign Medal (five bronze service stars), the Global War on Terrorism Expeditionary Medal, the Global War on Terrorism Service Medal, the Korea Defense Service Medal, the NCO Professional Development Ribbon (4th award), the Army Service Ribbon, the Overseas Service Ribbon (3rd award), the Kuwait Liberation Medal (Kuwait), the Kuwait Liberation Medal (Saudi Arabia), the Drivers Badge (wheel), the Ranger Tab, the Expert Infantryman's Badge, the Combat Infantryman's Badge, the Order of Saint Maurice (Centurion), and he is a member of the Distinguished Audie Murphy Club.

News Briefs

Gate hours change

The Faulkner Gate will operate with reduced hours Wednesday and Nov. 20 with being open 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. each day. Faulkner Gate will reopen with normal operating hours Nov. 21, being open 4:30 a.m. to 8:30 p.m.

The Newton Gate will be closed Wednesday and Nov. 20. The Newton Gate will reopen with normal operating hours Nov. 21, from 4:30 a.m. to 8:30 p.m.

Bone marrow registry drive

The 1st Battalion, 145th Aviation Regiment and the 1st Battalion, 13th Aviation Regiment will continue their bone marrow registration drive today and Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the post exchange main lobby, the main lobby in Bldg. 5700 and the Lyster Army Health Clinic Laboratory. The drive seeks to increase registration of people in the Department of Defense-supported National Bone Marrow Registry. The registration requires four cotton swab samples and filling out a consent form — estimated time of about 10 minutes.

DHR closure

The Fort Rucker Directorate of Human Resources will close for its annual Thanksgiving Luncheon Wednesday from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. The closure includes the Soldier For Life Transition Assistant Program, Army Continuing Education Center, Army Substance Abuse Program and Military Personnel Division (DEERS/ID cards, in/out processing, reassignment, transition/retirement services, and casualty).

For emergencies, people can call 332-9672 or 432-2070.

Operation Santa

The Fort Rucker Sergeant Audie Murphy Club will host Operation Santa this year. The program is aimed at providing assistance to Soldiers and families who may be facing financial difficulties during the holidays. The operation provides gifts to children, ages 2-15, to help lift spirits during the holiday season, according to club members.

All Fort Rucker Soldiers are eligible to take part. Leaders are asked to identify Soldiers within their formations who are facing financial hardship to the Fort Rucker SAMC by Wednesday. For submission details, call 255-3868.

Operation Santa will take place Dec. 6 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in Bldg. 9400 on Dustoff Avenue. Each child will receive two stocking stuffers and one big ticket gift item. Parents will be able to pick out the gift items from a wide assortment of popular toys and gadgets. Free gift wrapping will also be available for each item. Santa will also be available for pictures. To coordinate an alternate pick up date, call 255-3868.

PPPT instructor training

People looking for a way to positively impact Soldiers and gain experience as a leader should consider become a Pregnancy and Postpartum Physical Training Program instructor trainer. The position requires completion of the PPPT Exercise Leader Training that provides guidance on leading exercise sessions for pregnant and postpartum Soldiers in a PPPT consolidated installation program.

Attendees may include unit NCOs, health care personnel, and Morale, Welfare and Recreation personnel interested in PPPT program implementation. Requirements include: enthusiasm about helping others succeed; E-6 and above or junior officer; not being pregnant or postpartum; not on a permanent physical profile for no physical training; and stability of at least one year.

Course registration is available by calling the local PPPT NCO in charge at 255-7846, or the officer in charge at 255-7719. The next training is scheduled for Jan. 12-16 at the Fortenberry-Colton Physical Fitness Center.

For more information about the PPPT Program visit the Army Knowledge Online PPPT website at <https://www.us.army.mil/suite/page/693153>.

Latest Force 2025 comm system testing complete

By Sgt. James Avery
16th Mobile Public Affairs Detachment

FORT BLISS, Texas — The Brigade Modernization Command has completed their latest field test of the second increment of the Warfighter Information Network-tactical communication system, a Force 2025 initiative that will push real-time intelligence down to a maneuver brigade's company level for the first time.

Network Integration Evaluation 15.1 is the eighth iteration of the semi-annual field test, in which 3,900 Soldiers and 1,200 government employees put multiple pieces of equipment through its paces in the rough Fort Bliss terrain, from Oct 3 to Nov. 4, not just to refine tactics, techniques and procedures for the equipment, but also to push the capabilities of the communication network to the limit.

"It's amazing what the Soldiers are able to do with these systems," said Maj. Gen. Peter Utley, commanding general of the U.S. Army Test and Evaluation Command. "They are able to find other capabilities and really maximize the capabilities of these systems far beyond what we thought they could do."

The new network will provide actionable information in a manner that is easy to process, allowing commanders on the ground to have greater awareness of the battlefield around them and the assets at their disposal, which will in turn make the unit more agile and flexible as part of the Army's transformation.

While each piece of equipment went through developmental testing before originally coming to NIE, the exercise has reached a point now where Soldiers, most of whom come from 2nd Brigade, 1st Armored Division, are familiar enough with the equipment from past NIEs to see improvements in the system and build upon past experience to expand what they can do well past the limitations of a lab, according to Col. Jim Crider, BMC deputy commander.

"When you put things out in the field, and you get a rain storm, or the wind blows 20 or 30 knots, or it gets in the heat, it performs differently," Crider said. "This area is more than just desert. There's undulating terrain, high mountains, narrow and wide passes ... all of which makes this an ideal location to conduct evaluations."

The main tests for the WIN-T2 system are its simplicity and interoperability. The network of computers and radios is designed to easily work with current systems and adapt to the technology of America's allies and even future pieces of equipment. Brig. Gen. Timothy Coffin, commanding general of White Sands Missile Range, New Mexico, where a large part of the NIE testing occurs, noted it was critical for the systems to communicate with as little human interface as possible, so that Soldiers could focus their attention on completing the mission.

"The promise of NIE is the ability to bring all those systems together in a seamless way, where the operator can really focus on the fight, and not fight the systems," Coffin said. "We don't want to add burden onto the Soldier or the commander. We want to allow them to focus their intelligence and their efforts into fighting the adversary."

Past iterations of NIE have already proven their worth, most notably validating Capability Set 13, for the 10th Mountain Division (Light Infantry), prior to their 2014 deployment to Afghanistan. With this iteration NIE, has evaluated more than 200 systems and used those lessons learned to provide recommendations for the future of doctrine, organization, training, material, leadership, personnel and facilities to the Department of the Army.

According to Lt. Col. Timothy Gearhart of Project Manager Mission Command, the evaluation accomplishes this by putting the developers of the equipment side-by-side with the Soldiers testing the systems.

"When we can get the Soldiers, the material developers and even the combat developers — the guys who are writing the doctrine on how these future systems should be fought — all in the same place at the same time, we can do very smart things in giving the Soldier the best product today and the best product tomorrow, much faster than we have in the past," Gearhart said.

In addition to Fort Bliss Soldiers shaping one of the initiatives designed to boost Army equipment availabilities, they are also receiving a new form of training that will prepare and improve them for future operations.

According to Utley, the knowledge Soldiers take from NIE is also increasing their creativity and flexibility in utilizing the equipment tactically: a vital trait for them to pass on as leaders.

"I feel very strongly that NIE allows us to see what is in the art of the possible as it relates to these systems," Utley said. "We could have a system that was developed to address a specific capability but now we're starting to see the capability for it to, perhaps, do other things beyond what we originally designed it to do."

Army Production premieres 'iSoldier' newscast

By Lisa Ferdinando
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Soldiers at Defense Media Activity-Army Broadcasting recently premiered the new "iSoldier" newscast, a new multi-media program aimed at younger Soldiers.

The newscast from Army Broadcasting at Fort Meade, Maryland, is a weekly two-minute Internet-based program showcasing the most current Army information from around the world.

It is "fun, hip and informational," said Michael Burnette, chief of Army Broadcasting.

The inaugural program on Friday featured 1st Lt. Alonzo Cushing posthumously receiving the Medal of Honor for his heroism at Gettysburg; the selection of the next sergeant major of the Army, Command Sgt. Maj. Daniel A. Dailey; and Soldiers with the 902nd Engineer Company building an Ebola treatment unit in Liberia.

Burnette said iSoldier will showcase important Army messages, but in a way that is "younger, hipper and more relevant" to Soldiers.

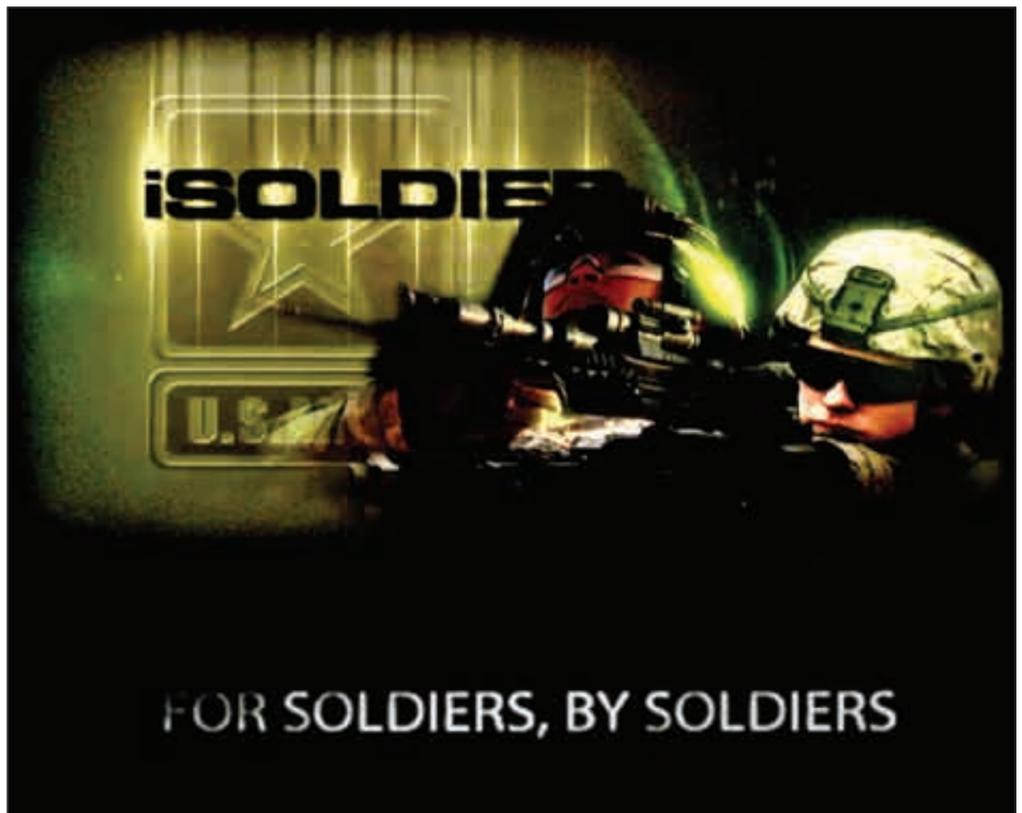

"We've even branded it 'for Soldiers by Soldiers,'" he said. "We want this to be some immediate information that they can use and their family members can use to know what is going on with the Army around the world."

Producers of the show will be looking for feedback so they can create the most engaging product, Burnette said.

"It's still the important messages that the Army wants to get out, but we're trying to put it out in an entertaining and informative way, and it's short and sweet — more of a headline-news fashion to where they can consume it on their media device or online," he said.

The new iSoldier program can be found online at www.youtube.com/TheSoldiersMag. The show can also be seen on American Forces Network channels overseas.

The newly redesigned Army News Service webpage, at www.army.mil/ARNEWS, will also post iSoldier. The page, launched Friday, features more imagery as well as an embedded video player. The ARNEWS page continues to highlight Army program and policy news originating within Headquarters Department of the Army.

REMOTE LETHALITY:

Army researchers address challenges

By Ed Lopez

Picatinny Arsenal Public Affairs

PICATINNY ARSENAL, N.J. – In popular culture, the idea of robots that perform human-like functions has a special hold on the imagination, based on real-life examples like space exploration, unmanned aerial drones and stoked by futuristic scenarios in movies like the “Terminator” series.

The military has used and experimented with robots that perform functions such as scouting and surveillance, carrying supplies and detecting and disposing of improvised homemade bombs.

However, when it comes to integrating lethality, such as a weapon capable of firing 10 rounds per second onto an unmanned ground vehicle, issues arise such as safety, effectiveness and reliability, as well as military doctrine on how much human involvement is required.

Robert Testa, the technical lead of the Remote Weapons Branch at Picatinny Arsenal, New Jersey, recognizes the growing evolution in autonomous technologies and is focused on improving existing remote weapon technologies for manned and unmanned platforms, as well as fixed-site applications.

Testa, whose branch is part of the Armament Research, Development and Engineering Center, said the term supervised autonomy strikes a contemporary balance between schools of thought that range between total human control (tele-operation) and researchers who are developing the technologies to enable robots to think for themselves.

Tele-operated means a human makes all the decisions regarding the activities of a remote platform, which is linked to the operator through a radio frequency or a physical link such as copper cable or fiber.

Regarding the term supervised autonomy, Testa said, “I believe that UGV (unmanned ground vehicle) and robotic platform developers apply the term supervised autonomy because not only do robust fully autonomous ground platforms still require substantial development, but it is essential that any UGV have the capability to react to command and control from a human operator under certain circumstances.

“This is similar to the addition of limited autonomy to RWS (remote weapon systems), but our primary focus has to be the robust, real time, tele-operation capability to ensure safe and effective weapon operation, regardless of the platform or application.”

The term – supervised autonomy – also reflects the current state of technology.

Testa favors the term unmanned ground vehicle, which can encompass either a tele-operated platform or a robot with varying degrees of autonomy, as a way to distill the mission of the remote weapons branch at Picatinny with respect to remote lethality.

“There are some areas where we and our partners are developing the capability to add degrees of supervised autonomy for weapon systems, but we recognize that you will always require real-time manned supervision of what the RWS is aiming at, what targets are engaged, and when that engagement takes place, i.e., trigger pull,” Testa said.

Army research into remote lethality complies with Department of Defense Directive 3000.09 “Autonomy in Weapon Systems,” published in November 2012. The protocols reflect the current doctrine addressing all classes of remote and unmanned weapon operation designed to allow commanders and operators to exercise appropriate levels of human judgment over the use of force.

“We can easily enable current generation remote weapon systems to aim and engage targets autonomously,” Testa said. “Yet current doctrine and the realization that current sensor and processor technologies would provide little or no assurance to what was engaged, keeps the real time tele-operation mode of weapons use at the center of what we develop and demonstrate today.

“Today’s current remote weapons systems are primarily developed and deployed as tele-op weapon systems, yet they inherently lend themselves as the starting point for the future of UGV lethality,” Testa continued. “The (Remote Weapons Branch) is working to make remote weapons more remote.”

“The two primary facets of the (Remote Weapons Branch) research are to develop advanced functional capabilities for the weapon system and the development of the system architecture and communications between the operator and the weapon, enabling development of extension kits that can support various transmission media such as radio frequency or a physical link such as optical fiber,” he said.

Researchers are aware that the term remote weapon may evoke an image of something operating many miles away, with a high degree of autonomy; however, remote could also mean a weapons system on top of a vehicle with the operator inside under the protection of armor.

At ARDEC, a remote weapon system is closely associated with something like the fielded Common Remotely Operated Weapon Station.

CROWS is a stabilized mount that contains a sensor suite and fire-control software. It allows on-the-move target acquisition and first-burst target engagement. Capable of target engagement under day and night conditions, the CROWS sensor suite includes a daytime video camera, thermal camera and laser rangefinder.

CROWS supports the MK19 Grenade Machine Gun, the M2 .50 Caliber Machine Gun, M240B Machine Gun and M249 Squad Automatic Weapon, weapons originally designed for manned operation. The system has been integrated onto more than 20 platforms, from the Humvee to the M1 Abrams tank.

Yet current-generation remote-weapons systems as CROWS cannot support other functions essential to making remote weapons more remote.

The ARDEC-developed Advanced Remote Armament System has additional capabilities, such as an externally powered, purpose-built weapon to improve reliability and accuracy, the ability to load and clear the weapon remotely and an increased stowed ammunition load without decreasing aim or stabilization. It can also reload the weapon or change ammunition type without manned intervention at the weapon, in approximately six seconds.

Also critical for future asymmetric engagements is the ability to change from lethal to non-lethal ammunition that ARAS provides. ARDEC has developed both 7.62mm and .50 caliber ARAS prototypes. The ARAS patents are owned by the U.S. Army, which enable cost-effective acquisition once future requirements are generated.

Although ARDEC does not develop vehicles or platforms for its weapons, it has used a tele-operated MS3 Ripsaw as a “surrogate platform” for the development of UGV lethality technologies, including wireless extension kits for CROWS, ARAS and other remote weapons systems.

These programs have culminated with the first UGV Scout Gunnery Table VI experiment in November 2013, at Fort Dix, New Jersey. ARDEC also works with other government and industry partners to weaponize UGV platforms.

While some UGV functions may include such things as carrying equipment, surveillance or removing homemade bombs, their functions are not lethal in nature. But incorporating powerful weapons onto a UGV presents a number of technical challenges, including minimizing or eliminating latency.

Latency means delay or the time elapsed between using controls to initiate an action and when it actually happens. This is particularly critical when you have high-rate-of-fire weapons, Testa said.

Latency also applies to video, or the time elapsed between the images captured by a RWS mounted camera and when they actually appear on the screen of the operator.

“Latencies are bad, and they are technically challenging, especially video latency,” Testa said. “Our goal is to minimize video latencies as much as possible and we are targeting a maximum of 250 milliseconds, or quarter of a second.”

Testa said humans start to notice latency at around 250 milliseconds. “You start to sense, ‘I moved the joystick, but I didn’t see the reticle move right away.’”

“You want your video to be real-time as much as your controls are real-time,” explained Testa. “I pull the trigger, I want the gun to shoot immediately or close to it as possible, but I also want to know what I’m looking at as close to real time as possible.”

The lethal nature of a weaponized UGV, and the need to keep latency to a minimum, are reasons that a robust connection from the operator to the remote weapon system is critical, whether that link is by radio, fiber or copper.

Testa said that when people hear about predator drones hitting their targets while the operator is halfway around the world, that may leave the impression that something similar can occur with remote weapons systems on the ground.

“They are using satellite communications with a fairly large latency,” Testa noted of such drones. “We’re shooting machine guns in a cluttered and asymmetric ground environment. That makes the problem a lot tougher in some ways. Drones are targeting for and launching one missile that has guidance to the threat. We are shooting dumb bullets at 10 per second, so we don’t have a lot of wiggle room.”

A futuristic vision of a fully autonomous robot that thinks and acts independently would essentially take human judgment out of the equation, and possibly without a real-time communications link to support supervised weapon operations.

“Where we are with the weapons side today is tele-op; I need to be able to talk to my weapon,” Testa said. “An autonomous UGV that could keep driving, increasing range, would lose that tele-op capability, in which case we would no longer have man-in-the-loop with the weapon – that is still unacceptable per DODD 3000.09. So currently we are constrained by radio function and that limits our range. Radio technology is also largely driven by the commercial market, and we need to keep an eye on our overall system cost.”

Testa said remote weapon systems require relatively high bandwidth and a continuous flow of data to the RWS, so that it doesn’t result in continuous dropped messages, which could cause the system to reduce capability or shut down altogether.

“If a Soldier is engaging a threat to save himself and his buddies, he can’t afford dropped messages to the point that the weapon often stops shooting,” Testa said.

ARDEC engineers have been working on fiber and radio frequency extension kits that would increase the range of remote weapons systems.

“We believe that it’s very hard for somebody to decipher our messages to the point where the enemy could turn our systems against us even if they are not overly encrypted,” Testa said. “But we’re not currently addressing encryption methods, and the development of these capabilities lies outside of the expertise of the ARDEC remote weapons branch.

“It doesn’t mean certain degrees of encryption or jamming prevention couldn’t or shouldn’t be built in,” he said. “It is not our focus right now nor is it core ARDEC mission. Our mission is to address how an RWS behaves when a cable is cut, or [radio] messages are temporarily lost.”

The simple theory is, “When you lose the link between the operator and the weapon, the system will stop doing what it’s doing and won’t start doing something it’s not,” Testa explained.

The technological sophistication of the enemy, or the theater of operations, would be factors to consider regarding encryption, jamming and frequency allocation, Testa said, but technical research dollars are too limited to engage in speculation about what a specific theater and battlefield scenario would require.

The ARDEC Remote Weapons Branch partners with other DOD organizations on the research, development and testing of technologies to add degrees of supervised autonomy for integration with advanced remote weapons systems.

Orient Shield 14 finishes field training

By Master Sgt. Corine Lombardo
Army News Service

CAMP HIGASHI-CHITOSE, Japan – Hundreds of U.S. Army Soldiers and Japan Ground Self-Defense Force members headed for the mountains to defend sovereign territory and defeat a fictional enemy during a simulated combat field training exercise in the area Nov 3-5.

The 72-hour field exercise puts to the test what Soldiers from the 2nd Stryker Brigade Combat Team, 2nd Infantry Division, from Joint Base Lewis-McChord, Washington, and Japan Ground Self-Defense Force members from the 11th Infantry Regiment, 7th Division, Northern Army, have been rehearsing for the past week and a half.

“The benefit of spending this time together allows us to work in unison as one team. Although we will fight separately, we have one common goal—defend and help secure a peaceful allied country,” said Capt. Andrew Julian, an operations officer assigned to the 2nd Battalion, 1st Inf. Regt., from Joint Base Lewis-McChord.

The exercise brings U.S. Soldiers to Japan to honor the alliance and work together with Japan’s defense force to regain sovereign territory against an armed invasion.

Each force has a list of objectives they must complete throughout the exercise as they work their way through the mountainous terrain to reach their final objective. Opposing them is a contingent of U.S. Army Soldiers playing the “enemy” who will attempt to disrupt their actions.

“We use different tactics and procedures, but knowing each other’s capabilities and how each of us operates in advance helps us support one another,” said Julian.

Throughout the field exercise the U.S. Army and Japan Ground Self-Defense Force forces are putting into play a host of skills and techniques they shared and demonstrated over the past 10 days.

Infantry Soldiers have been brushing-up on map reading skills for navigating unknown terrain. Together with their Japan Ground Self-Defense Force counterparts they have been reinforcing combat skills including moving under direct fire, engaging targets while moving in a confined area and reacting quickly to unstable targets, as well as sniper marksmanship, explained Capt. Robert Lee, an operations officer with the 1st Bn., 17th Inf. Regt.

Armored mechanized counterparts have been exchanging techniques and demonstrating maneuver capabilities through mortar and tank live-fire exercises.

In preparing for the field training exercise, Aviators from the 3rd Battalion, 25th Aviation Regiment, from Wheeler Field, Hawaii, have been working together with their counterparts conducting close combat air attacks, air assault missions, aeromedical evacuations and aircraft refueling.

The enemy is not real, but the challenges Soldiers face are. They are enduring cold, wet and muddy conditions to traverse miles of unfamiliar landscape, and using the combat skills and tactics they have been rehearsing.

Although the enemy is make believe, there’s a specific operational planning process that is completed long before Soldiers move to the field.

This process involves studying all aspects of the area Soldiers will be training in, to include weather, terrain and vegetation, potential obstacles and the make-up and capabilities of the hypothetical enemy forces they face, Julian explained.

This same process takes place for all military actions whether in training or in actual combat.

According to Julian, both forces expended a great deal of time planning and rehearsing the complex tactical movements and maneuvers they are conducting throughout the exercise.

“This not only allows us to be successful in the exercise, but it also helps us build a partner force with our counterparts,” Julian emphasized. “Everything we have been doing over the past two-weeks has built a very strong foundation for this culminating event.”

Army, RAND partner on ‘Today’s Soldier Survey’

Army News Service
Staff Report

WASHINGTON — The Army and the RAND Corporation are working together to conduct a Soldier needs assessment survey from September to December at 45 Army installations.

The survey, called “Today’s Soldier Survey,” is available online to randomly selected active-duty Soldiers, who will be notified by e-mail that they have been selected to participate.

Soldiers will be able to respond to questions on problems they and their families have experienced over the past year. The results of this survey will help senior leaders identify the needs of Soldiers and their families, how Soldiers prioritize those needs, and how the Army can best address the most pressing unmet needs — whether through Army-provided services or community and non-federal entity partnerships. The survey will end in December.

“The challenges that face Soldiers and families are complex and diverse,” said Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Ray Odierno. “As Army leaders, we’re asking for input from our Soldiers to help us prioritize resources and services most important to them and to their families. We must ensure that support services are both needed and effective.”

“This survey is a path for Soldiers to help senior Army leaders understand the Soldier’s point of view,” said Dr. Carra Sims, RAND project manager. “We need to understand how Soldiers prioritize problems and how they address those problems.

“Especially in a time of declining resources, the Army wants to be sure it is prioritizing services that are important to Soldiers. We want to be sure that services are effective in helping Soldiers manage their needs and the needs of their families.”

This study is not to be confused with the Military Workplace Study administered by RAND at about the same time, Sims said.

“Our survey has a much broader focus,” she said.

“Today’s Soldier seeks to understand the challenges and needs of today’s Soldiers and families in a general sense and covers domains ranging from military practices and culture to financial and legal issues,” she said. “The focus is also solely on the Army, whereas the Military Workplace

Children decorate pumpkins during the 2013 Fort Rucker Oktoberfest. A survey under way asks Soldiers and family members about programs they like and issues they face.

Study went to all services and the Coast Guard.”

Traditional Department of Defense and Department of the Army evaluations ask Soldiers and family members about their use of existing on-post programs. This unique survey, however, places the experiences of today’s Soldiers first, asking what types of problems they recently experienced, how they prioritized problems, if they sought help from Army or non-Army resources, and if they ultimately received the support they needed.

“Unchecked problems among Soldiers and their families can grow into time-consuming distractions for them, for units, and for commanders,” said Sims. “Unmet needs can negatively affect Soldier and family well-being as well as unit morale, retention, and readiness.”

Veterans: Separate ceremonies held at schools

in your footsteps. Fellow citizens who have and will continue to answer the call to follow the honorable example that each of you have shown.

"So today, just simply know that this nation and her citizens are grateful for the sacrifices each of you have made to preserve liberty, freedom and our way of life," he said. "God bless this great nation, and watch over all of our Soldiers, our Sailors, our Airmen, our Marines and our Coast Guardsmen who are on watch and are in harm's way today all around the world. Thank you for joining us and, most especially, thank you for your service."

Retired Air Force Lt. Col. George Hardy, one of the original Tuskegee Airmen, was the special guest during the ceremony, and he said he was grateful for the honor.

"It's just an honor to be here – I'm so proud that they invited me to be here," he said. "We had a lot to fight against years ago. The services were really racially segregated, so we had several battles to fight, and we overcame them all.

"When I went into the service in WWII in 1943, I was in the Army, and it was Army Air Forces, so I knew the Army, wore the Army uniform, and I'm very proud of that," he said.

Another veteran, retired CW4 Robert Cooper, who spent 30 years on active duty and is now a post commander for the Veterans of Foreign Wars, said the ceremony reminds him that "freedom is not free."

"The reason we have freedom today is because of the veterans that served over the years," he said. "And the best hope for our nation is when we see young folks in JROTC (Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps) programs and the group we had last night at the ceremony singing patriotic songs."

The Fort Rucker schools also honored veterans during separate ceremonies. The Fort Rucker Primary School hosted its ceremony Friday and the Fort Rucker Elementary School hosted its ceremony Monday.

The elementary school's students and staff lined the halls to welcome service members, family members and veterans by waving flags, enthusiastically expressing gratitude for their service, offering up high-fives and even giving out handmade cards to a fortunate few.

Lundy was also on hand at the elementary school, where, after getting enthusiastic "Hooahs," and even an "Oorah," in honor of the Marine Corps, out of the student body, he told the crowd that veterans are ordinary people doing extraordinary things.

"They do understand that freedom doesn't come free, so they're willing to make great sacrifices," he said. "They may separate themselves from their families for long periods of time, they'll face great danger out there all around the world, but they're all doing it for you. And today, as we sit here and we look at this ceremony, I will tell you that it reaffirms in me of why we do this – because of all of our young citizens we have out there so you can grow up with freedom and liberty, and be able to pursue happiness like our founders wanted.

"And that's what veterans do. Veterans secure freedom, and they place themselves in harm's way, if necessary, so we can assure that our way of life continues for this great nation," Lundy said. "So today, they won't ask you for a lot, just a simple thank you is enough for the veterans that are out there. So, when you see your veteran, especially if they're your mom or dad, tell them thank you, give them a big hug, and they will continue to do the things they need to do to protect our great nation."

AFAP: Goal to make 'real changes for the better'

of work that needs to be expanded on that may help the entire Army and the entire Army family. Your efforts today will get to the Department of the Army – that's the beauty of this thing."

In past years, more than 685 different recommendations have gone forward to improve quality of life for Soldiers, family members, civilians and retirees. In 2012, the No. 1 issue at the Army-level AFAP conference was started at Fort Rucker.

That issue was the Survivor Investment of Military Death Gratuity and Service Member's Group Life Insurance and the time allotment of 12 months that was given to place the full amount awarded into a Roth individual retirement fund or Coverdell Education Savings Account, said Hall. That issue was worked to try and get the extension to 36 months to allow more time for family members to grieve before having to worry about those monetary issues.

This year's top issues that came out of the conference in ascending order include, the Fort Rucker Stray Facility, medical record review, priority placement program eligibility for newly married spouses, modernization of the child development center and Veteran's Affairs transition assistance.

These issues were worked down from 15 total issues that were submitted from people and organizations across the installation, said Kohl, and were worked in workgroups made up of delegates, and subject-matter experts to determine which of the issues were the most pressing and what resolutions they could offer to remedy the issues.

"Following the conference we will have the garrison commander's steering committee, and assign people to work the issues and make recommendations," he said. "The issues that the garrison commander can address locally will be dealt with at the local level. He'll assign action officers to work the issue and put together a plan to address and resolve the issue if possible. The ones that can't be dealt with on a local level because of the scope of the issue will be forwarded up to (Installation Management Command)."

Although Fort Rucker offers many ways for people to submit feedback, such as the Interactive Customer Evaluation, Kohl said that AFAP offers a depth that ICE can't.

"The difference between AFAP and something like ICE is that these issues are worked through and plans are made to address these issues through AFAP," he said. "This isn't just someone reading an ICE comment and then resolving it. These resolutions must go through a process, and that allows for there to be a depth of insight gathered because there are subject-matter experts that work the issues. AFAP issues tend to be bigger, broader issues in scope and offer a way to make some real changes for the better."

education services specialist. "Even if the requirements do not say you need to have a degree, if everyone else does, the competition is that much harder. Education is playing more of a role in that."

Even if Soldiers don't know where to start, the center has many assessment tools to see where they stand, where they want to end up and how to get there, said Eagle.

"Some Soldiers will claim that they don't have the time because of family matters and other stresses on their life, and they have to wait until they get out of the military," said Eagle. "That's fine, they can wait until they separate and use their G.I. Bill, which is an excellent program. That's what the G.I. Bill was designed for. Soldiers would complete their commitment to the military and separate, then use that time after separation to develop their credentials and then they get the job."

"It's complicated, though, if you have a family and other obligations," he said. "You might not be able to just go to college and be supported entirely by the G.I. Bill."

That is why the center staff works with every Soldier that comes in the door, wherever they are on their path, to try to make a plan for their educational goals, Eagle added.

"We hope Soldiers come down and talk with us, one of us will be here for them," he said. "When a Soldier walks in we will see them as quickly as we can."

"We have people come in with different types of awareness about what is available for them," said McNally, "Some people know exactly what their goals are, but for others we can take the time to talk with them. We have assessment tools to help them decide where they want to go in their academic direction or their career direction. We are not just here to help them go to school – we are also here to help people in their military career and later on in their civilian career."

Sometimes people are just looking for a civilian certification for a job they are already doing in the military, and sometimes people are looking to get a degree in something different than what they do, he said.

"We are pretty open. People come here with all different types of situations and our job is to understand that situation and move them forward," added McNally.

"We help spouses, too," said Eagle. "There are several ways spouses can get help with their educational goals. After a Soldier has been in the Army for six years, they can transfer their G.I. Bill to their spouse. The Soldier then has to serve an additional four years."

Eagle also spoke about the My Career Advancement Account, saying that it is a workforce development program that provides up to $4,000 of financial assistance to eligible military spouses who are pursuing a license, certification or associate's degree in a portable career field and occupation.

Spouses of service members on active duty in pay grades E-1 to E-5, W-1 to W-2 and O-1 to O-2 who can start and complete their coursework while their military sponsor is on Title 10 military orders, including spouses married to members of the National Guard and Reserve in these same pay grades, are eligible.

"The focus of the program is to help military spouses get credentials so they can get a job and when the service member moves and they have to move, as well, the spouse has credentials to get another job at the new location," said Eagle. "So, it is focused on those transportable career areas."

He also mentioned the Federal Application for Student Aid that is available to everyone who qualifies, including military spouses.

"You fill out the form, send it in, and the Department of Education determines what your need is and what types of programs they can provide," said Eagle. "And, of course, there are thousands of scholarships out there. For example, Corvias here on post has some excellent scholarships for family members and there are many others out there, you just have to apply."

"Soldiers need to look seriously at educational opportunities while they are in the Army to prepare themselves for when they are eventually going to leave the Army," he said.

"Every Soldier takes that uniform off for the last time," added McNally. "The day to begin preparing for that time is today."

Soldiers and family members interested in continuing education can visit the center in Bldg. 4502 or call 255-2378.

25th CAB hones recovery skills

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS, HAWAII — With bullets ricocheting off the frame of a downed aircraft, a team of Aviation mechanics assigned to the 25th Combat Aviation Brigade, 25th Infantry Division, frantically try to fix the aircraft's problem.

The infantry could not provide security during this mission and the mechanics must secure the area themselves.

Enemy combatants try to move closer, but the security team remains vigilant and holds them off. As the mechanics are turning wrenches and the security teams returning fire, Spc. Adam Hatchell, a UH-60 helicopter repairer, is shot in the arm and bleeding heavily.

Staff Sgt. Jeffrey VanCamp, a section chief, 209th Aviation Support Battalion, grabs his aid bag and rushes to his injured Soldier. Simultaneously, the maintenance team assesses the damage to the aircraft and determines the only option is to sling load.

This may sound like the plot of an action movie, but in reality it was an exciting training exercise to hone the skills of the 25th CAB Downed Aircraft Recovery Teams.

"I wanted this training to be beneficial, yet entertaining," said 1st Lt. Guy White, pilot and shops platoon leader, 209th AVS. "Each team had a maximum of four hours on the objective. The biggest reason for this was to highlight and validate their ability to function in a crunched time frame."

The 25th CAB enlisted the help of 2nd Battalion, 35th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade Combat Team, to provide several classes on basic infantry tactics. In addition, infantrymen would also evaluate the Soldiers during the

HUSTLER TROUGH

Soldiers team up with Air Force in operation

By Staff Sgt. Kulani Lakanaria
24th Press Camp Headquarters

FORT BLISS, Texas — The roar of engines tore calm-grey skies. Sharp cracks of artillery rounds leveled targets. Finally, the loud buzz of a GAU-8 Avenger rotary cannon spewed a wall of bullets courtesy of A-10 Warthogs.

These were the sounds of Operation Hustler Trough, a joint training exercise combining the expertise of Soldiers and Airmen from 1st Armored Division from Fort Bliss and Nellis Air Force Base, Nevada. The exercise was designed to improve the 1st Armored Division's ability to synchronize and integrate all fires on the battlefield.

The training environment at Fort Bliss and White Sands Missile Range allows Soldiers and Airmen to conduct operations in ways they would expect on the battlefield, and more importantly, the future battlefield.

"This is the first time I had the chance to shoot [artillery] rounds for fixed-wing aircraft," said Sgt. Radrick Stone, section chief, Battery A, 2nd Battalion, 3rd Field Artillery Regiment.

Lt. Col. Kevin D. Brown, commander, 2nd Battalion, 3rd Field Artillery Regiment, said the role of his unit is to provide indirect fire for the Forward Air Controller Certification.

The Air Force pilots, on the other hand, are students of the U.S. Air Force Weapons School and belong to the 66th Weapon Squadron, which specializes in training pilots on the A-10 Warthog Thunderbolt II.

The Army frequently uses forward observers to spot targets and call on the Air Force to destroy them but Operation Hustler Trough used Air Force Warthog pilots to spot targets for the Army to destroy using indirect fire.

"The training value of this mission improves our unit's lethality," said Stone. "It is a great experience for all junior Soldiers involved. My team performed well today. There's a standard level, but my team stepped up given the environment and weather conditions."

Sgt. Maj. Robert S. O'Donnell, 1st Armored Division Fires sergeant major, stressed the benefit of the live training.

"What Hustler Trough is doing is building bridges to bring close air support to Fort Bliss," he said. "... to get live experience as opposed to simulator experience. Nothing replaces live experience."

Artillery, mortar, AH-64 Apaches, A-10s and other aircraft worked together in support of each other to accomplish the mission.

FIELD TRIP

Soldiers support high school's assignment

By Sgt. Jesse Smith
2nd Combat Aviation Brigade Public Affairs

CAMP HUMPREYS, South Korea — In the late morning of Oct. 30, students from Camp Humphreys Middle/High School gathered around an OH-58 Kiowa helicopter on Nightmare Ramp at the Desiderio Airfield.

They were eagerly awaiting the explanation of the mission on the Korean Peninsula and the history behind how the helicopter got its name so that they could complete a school assignment, or maybe they were just excited because they wanted to get inside the helicopter and play with its many gadgets.

Capt. Bowman J. Spillane, the assistant operations officer for the 3rd General Support Aviation Battalion, 2nd Combat Aviation Brigade, 2nd Infantry Division, had a part in the planning of the helicopter display. The goal of the display was to help provide support and trust for its Soldiers' families he said.

"I feel like this is really our chance to support them the way that these families are supporting our Soldiers," Spillane said.

One of the school's teachers that was in charge of the students during the display was Nikki Allen.

"If you reach out to the military community and ask them to support what you are doing in the education arena, what I found is that they are more than willing to help out," Allen said, adding that the display was very organized and the students had been looking forward to the visit.

Leia Fowler, an eighth grade student from the school, found the display to be very informative.

"It's one thing to learn about all the different native tribes and all the helicopters in the classroom, but it's another thing to learn about them, and actually see them and get in them," Fowler said.

She said her father was actually a CH-47 Chinook helicopter pilot, but that she had never been able to go onto the airfield and get inside the four helicopters that were on display. Those helicopters were the OH-58 Kiowa, CH-47 Chinook, UH-60 Black Hawk, and AH-64 Apache.

If she got to do something like this again, Fowler said she would want to go even more in depth and learn as much as she could about the helicopters.

Another eighth grade student, Joseph K. Ellsworth, had completed the first part of the school assignment before even coming to the display. He had to present information regarding the tribe or native leader for which the four helicopters are named.

Ellsworth's teacher and the 3rd GSAB thought the project he presented was so great that they decided to put it on display inside the 3rd GSAB hangar for everyone to see and learn from.

Ellsworth said he had never done anything like this before and that he would definitely want to do this again.

"I would try to come up with more questions," he said in regards to what he would do the next time he got a chance to do this.

One of the Soldiers in charge of giving a class on a helicopter was CW2 Terrance J. Bailey, an OH-58 Kiowa pilot with the 6th Squadron, 17th Cavalry Regiment in support of 3rd GSAB, 2nd CAB, 2nd Inf. Div. for exercise and give them advice during certain situations.

As a result, the scenarios were not only realistic, but also challenged the Soldiers technical and tactical knowledge.

“When we contacted 2-35th Infantry, they were more than happy to support. It was great having them around to evaluate the leadership, reaction to contact and security,” White said.

The teams used real world assets such as medical evacuation and heavy lift. They were even air assaulted into the location. This added a degree of difficulty to the training.

“Bringing in the other units for this training highlights not just our ability, but theirs as well,” White said. “This training was a way for me to validate what my DART team can do,” White said. “It gives a commander an idea of what his Soldiers are capable of and what he needs to focus on for training.”

White, a former drill sergeant and now platoon leader, wanted to focus the training on the younger Soldiers in the brigade. He feels that getting them involved and excited about training will potentially keep talented Soldiers in the Army.

“When you empower your Soldiers, you get more results from your Soldiers,” White said. “We are opening their eyes to the bigger picture and show them where they fit in.”

“When a Soldier does their work the right way, he is saving a crew’s life on an aircraft, which in turn saves a guy on the ground. When they see it all come together, it’s priceless,” he added.

Division, provided close-air support called in by the Air Force A-10s serving as forward observers.

The atmosphere allowed the Soldiers and Airmen to train alongside one another, an opportunity that CW2 Scott Parker, an Apache pilot-in-command, believed was paramount for future deployments.

“I have only worked in joint atmospheres when I was deployed,” said Parker. “This exercise allowed all of us to refine our skills, so when or if we are deployed again we will be able to run smoother missions.”

The coordination between the Soldiers and Airmen proved to be a precise and commanding force. A-10 pilots called in targets from the air and Battery A dropped artillery rounds on the targets.

“This is the way we win wars – joint fires,” Brown said.

The large scale joint training exercise is a rare opportunity for Soldiers and Airmen to train together.

“Any chance we can get to work with the Air Force is greatly appreciated and well executed,” said 2nd Lt. Lukasz Michalowicz, fire direction officer, Battery A, 2nd Battalion, 3rd Field Artillery Regiment.

2nd CAB: Soldiers provide 21st century learning environment

Students from Camp Humphreys Middle/High School gather around an AH-64 Apache helicopter as a Soldier with the 3rd GSAB, 2nd CAB, 2nd Inf. Div. explains the mission and history of the helicopter Oct. 30 at Nightmare Ramp on Desiderio Airfield at Camp Humphreys, Korea.

the helicopter display. He was there to give a 15-minute class to the students about the mission and history of the OH-58 Kiowa.

“Within our squadron, we do a lot of stuff like this,” Bailey said, adding that he hopes that events like this continue.

Allen hopes that the Army is able to do events like this in the future, as well, and said that it was a privilege to have done this with her students.

“The Army Aviation 3-2nd GSAB led by Lt. Col. Kenneth Cole here at Camp Humphreys did an amazing job in planning this event to support our efforts in providing a 21st century learning environment for our military children,” she said.

“Throughout our study of the Apache, Blackhawk, Chinook and Kiowa tribes and leaders coupled with an in-depth tour of each of the four helicopters, our students have been able to walk away not only with a knowledge of the history and mission of each aircraft but have developed an appreciation for the Army’s tribute to the native history of our country through the naming of Army helicopters,” Allen said.

CONSTANT CARE

Mini CDC opens, offers care at all hours

By Nathan Pfau
Army Flier Staff Writer

Fort Rucker's Soldiers and family members work through all hours of the day, and the installation is making sure that those families are taken care of when it comes to child care.

The Fort Rucker Mini Child Development Center is a 24/7 childcare facility that offers Soldiers and families who work non-traditional hours more options when it comes to child care for children from six weeks of age to 11 years old, according to Toni Hampton, acting Fort Rucker Child, Youth and Schools Services director.

"The Mini CDC is designed for families that need child care outside of traditional work hours that can't be accommodated at the CDC," said Hampton. "It's for people like air traffic controllers, flight instructors, flight students or any number of those that have to work through the night."

The facility offers a huge advantage for the unique population that Fort Rucker is home to, and hourly care is available on a drop-in, space-available basis, she added.

The new facility features a living room, a den, a reading area, an open area, a full kitchen, a crib room for infants, an outdoor playground and separate sleeping rooms for boys and girls.

Each of the sleeping rooms are fitted with eight beds, storage compartments and full bathrooms that can be utilized for overnight care if needed, said Hampton.

The concept came about around 2007 when the idea was thrown around for a facility like the Mini CDC, she said. The CDC was having issues meeting the needs of those that worked throughout the night, and some childcare providers were having to stay throughout the night to care for these children.

Because of the long hours, many of the child-care providers were overstretching themselves by taking on too much, said Hampton. So, a survey was conducted

Sasha LaForge, supervising program specialist for the CDC, showcases the sitting and reading area in the Mini CDC. The Mini CDC is now open for 24/7 childcare for children ages six weeks to 11 years old.

and found that Fort Rucker had the right population for a 24/7 facility, and when the opportunity to get funding to build it came up, officials with the CDC seized it and the process began.

The Mini CDC also meets all the same standards as its bigger sister for fire, health and safety, but can only accommodate up to 20 children at a time.

"Although the capacity is much smaller, it should be able to meet the need," said the CYSS acting director. "The building is primarily for full-day care, part-day care and even hourly care on a space-available basis."

The same people with the same experience that that provide care for the children at the CDC will be providing care for those at the Mini CDC – child and youth program assistants. The assistants go through the same training program as the other childcare providers, and a manager will always be on duty at the new facility, said Hampton.

Although the facility is not the first of its kind, she believes it's the first of its kind being used specifically for the purpose it was designed for.

Many installations utilize hourly child care, but for Fort Rucker's population of flight students and instructors who work through all hours of the morning, Hampton said there is a greater need for 24/7 childcare, and now they're able to provide that.

The Mini CDC will utilize the same lesson plans and curriculum that is used in its sister building, but will be more of a multi-age grouping depending on the children that are there, said Hampton, adding that it depends on the amount of full-time care versus part-time care and hourly children are in the facility.

"We really try to meet the needs of the individual child, as well as the development of the group," she said, adding that each child is just as important as the next and the environment they will be cared for in is designed to nurture their development.

HOLLYDAY BAZAAR

Sgt. 1st Class Charles Duran shows his daughter, Natasha, how to shoot a rubber band gun, as his other daughter, Nyasia, shows her mother, Liz, a ping-pong shooter at one of the booths set up at the Fort Rucker Spouses Club Hollyday Bazaar last year. This year's bazaar will be Nov. 22 from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Yano Hall.

Event offers head start on holidays

By Nathan Pfau
Army Flier Staff Writer

It's that time of year again when decorations go up and people prepare for the holidays, and the Fort Rucker Community Spouses' Club is offering a way for people to get a head start on their holiday shopping.

This year's FRCS Community Hollyday Bazaar will be Nov. 22 from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Yano Hall, with an entry fee of $5 that benefits the spouses club to help people throughout the year, said Janna Bogert, FRCS publicity chair.

People are sure to get their money's worth as they shop more than 100 vendors for crafts, jewelry, furniture, antiques, toys, food and more, she said. There will also be a personal appearance from Santa, to whom children can write letters to while there, as well as live entertainment from children of Fort Rucker's schools. And, the first 250 people will receive a free "Swag Bag" filled with goodies.

"Whether you are looking for holiday gifts, decor, retail therapy, or yummy treats, we have it all," she said. "You really can't beat guilt-free shopping when it's for a good cause."

"The bazaar is a long-standing tradition that provides a day of fun and shopping, while raising money for a great cause, and that cause is supporting each other," said Bogert. "The Fort Rucker Spouses' Club is happy to be a part of this community and this is a small way for us to say thank you."

The bazaar will also feature opportunity drawings throughout the day, and children 12 and under get in free, and all proceeds from the Bazaar will go directly into the FRCS Community welfare and scholarship funds.

"Part of our mission statement is to develop a spirit of community responsibility, and through these funds we can reach out to the Wiregrass area," said the publicity chair. "We participate in local projects that better the community for us all and we hope to inspire a few others along the way.

"The Fort Rucker Community Spouses' Club provides us with opportunities for social, cultural, and creative pursuits while here at the home of Army Aviation," she said. "The primary mission is to develop a spirit of community responsibility, and our volunteers gladly give of their time and talents to serve both the military and civilian community. The hundreds of volunteer hours and thousands of dollars raised result in grants to worthwhile charitable causes and scholarships for military spouses and high school students."

During last year's bazaar, about $17,000 was directed toward scholarships, and with the support of other contributors, 34 scholarships were awarded totaling over $48,000, said Bogert.

That's why she said it's important to support the spouses club, because without the support, many of the scholarships would not be available.

"You don't want to miss out on the local children as they perform for us all and help us raise more for this community than we ever have before," said Bogert.

SecArmy: Cushing faithful 'til death

By David Vergun
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — First Lt. Alonzo H. Cushing remained at his post, wounded but fighting valiantly until he was shot dead.

Beside his cannon he fell, "blackened by powder and soaked red by blood," said Secretary of the Army John M. McHugh. Cushing "epitomized the faithfulness" of the Union and Confederate armies, July 3, 1863, at Gettysburg, McHugh said.

McHugh and others spoke at a ceremony Friday, inducting Cushing into the Pentagon's Hall of Heroes. The previous day, President Obama awarded Cushing the Medal of Honor.

Cushing, an 1861 United States Military Academy graduate, lies in the West Point Cemetery. At the behest of his mother, his headstone reads "Faithful Unto Death," the secretary noted.

"It is faithfulness which permeates the Cushing legacy," McHugh said. "Faithfulness of a young but incredibly dedicated Soldier to do his duty. The faithfulness of fellow Soldiers like 1st Sgt. Frederick Fuger, also a Medal of Honor recipient, who fought alongside his lieutenant to the very end.

"And, the faithfulness of citizens like Margaret Zerwekh, to never forget a Soldier's selfless sacrifice, to champion his noble cause," he continued.

Zerwekh, 94, a historian, attended both the Nov. 6 White House ceremony and the Hall of Heroes ceremony. She conducted research on Cushing's service in the Civil War. Certain that his valorous actions merited the Medal of Honor, she lobbied her congressmen for decades to make it happen.

The faithfulness of the nation to honor and never forget its patriotic servants is also heartening, McHugh said, defining faithfulness as "unfailingly remaining loyal to someone or something and putting that loyalty into consistent practice, regardless of extenuating circumstances."

Leading up to that fateful day, the 22-year-old lieutenant fought bravely at the battles of Manassas, Fredericksburg, Antietam and Chancellorsville.

By all accounts, he was a skilled artillery officer, and was well loved and respected by his subordinates and superiors alike, McHugh said.

Generals described him as "brave, cool and competent." One of his men described him as "a most able Soldier, a man of excellent judgment and character," he said.

All noted "his poise under fire, radiant grin and infectious smile that gave a soothing effect during the chaos of battle," McHugh said.

All of those qualities and more were present on July 3, 1863, at about 2:30 p.m., during the height of Maj. Gen. George E. Pickett's charge at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, he said.

As commander of Battery A, 4th U.S. Artillery, Army of the Potomac, observers described Cushing as "boldly standing tall atop Cemetery Ridge," McHugh remarked. At the start of the battle, he commanded 126 men and six cannons.

The Confederate artillery took its toll on them, however, he noted. All of his officers were killed and only two of his guns remained. Cushing was wounded in the abdomen and right shoulder, and his life was ebbing fast. Despite appeals from his men, he refused to leave the battlefield as Confederate forces closed in on him and shot him dead.

The Soldiers that day didn't fight for empire, domination or personal gain, the secretary said. They fought for value, for a cause and for one another. They fought for things they found worthy of their last full measure of devotion.

"At Gettysburg, the fate of our very nation hung in the balance," he said. Thanks to Soldiers like Cushing and the faithful who followed him, the nation was preserved.

Cushing and fellow Soldiers did not die in vain, McHugh said. "They died for a cause, they died for a country. And when you think about it, they died for each and every one of us. But those men are us, and we are there, Americans all. And we must remain ever faithful to their cause and their noble ideas. And let us also be ever faithful to their memory."

Army Vice Chief of Staff Gen. Daniel B. Allyn also spoke.

The courage and valor of Cushing's actions that day at Gettysburg "truly helped save the Union," Allyn said, pointing out that Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee brought the war to the North, as the fate of the nation hung in the balance during that critical moment in time.

Had Confederate forces breached Cushing's critical position atop Cemetery Ridge, it would have split the Army of the Potomac in half, possibly causing panic in its ranks, and the Union forces could have collapsed, possibly altering the outcome of the battle, Allyn said.

The horror of the battle is difficult to describe, he continued. The Confederate force's main target was destroying the Union artillery on Cemetery Ridge. A Soldier on the ridge described it like this: "The roar of guns was deafening. The air was soon clouded with smoke and the shriek and startling crack of exploding shells above, around and in our midst, the driving through the air of fence rails, posts and limbs of trees; the groans of dying men, the neighing of frantic and wounded horses, created a scene of absolute horror."

And, while other artillery units withdrew from the ridge, Cushing ordered his two surviving artillery pieces directly at the wall of the approaching Rebel forces, he said.

"Every round of Cushing's guns counted," Allyn said. "Equally important was his leadership, his refusal to quit, rallying the troops around him."

A Union Soldier, a prisoner of war from behind Confederate lines, witnessed the event. He described just how close Pickett's Charge came to success, he said. "The Confederates broke over the low, irregular stone wall with a chorus of yells. And our men appeared to be giving way, before the onset of the second line. The cheers of the Confederates made the hills echo. In that awful moment, I feared our line was hopelessly broken."

After Cushing was killed and the Confederates breached the Union line, his men "fought like a team possessed, hand-to-hand, bayonets, rifle butts, stones and fists, to hold their ground," Allyn said.

When the battle was over, he said, the survivors of Cushing's battery counted 600 dead Confederate soldiers in front of his two cannons. The Rebels breached the line, but didn't have enough men to hold their stolen ground and exploit their success. Every round counted.

Cushing's "valor and the unquenchable fervor it inspired in his Soldiers, truly saved the Union," Allyn concluded.

Obama:

MOH recipient's courage lives on in Soldiers today

By David Vergun
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama awarded the Medal of Honor to 1st Lt. Alonzo H. Cushing Nov. 6 for helping stop Maj. Gen. George E. Pickett's Charge at Gettysburg on July 3, 1863.

The ceremony took place in the Roosevelt Room of the White House, with Helen Loring Ensign accepting the medal on behalf of Cushing, her first cousin, twice removed. Some 24 other descendants were present, as well.

Long before Gettysburg, the West Point graduate "fought bravely" at the battles of Bull Run, Antietam, Chancellorsville and Fredericksburg, developing a reputation for "his cool, his competence and his courage under fire," Obama said.

Cushing commanded Battery A, 4th U.S. Artillery, 2nd Corps, Army of the Potomac, atop Cemetery Ridge. On that fateful day, some 10,000 of Gen. Robert E. Lee's troops advanced toward them in a line, elbow-to-elbow, a mile wide, in the final, desperate hours of the battle.

Smoke from the guns obscured the battlefield and the air was thick with lead. In the chaos, Cushing was hit and badly wounded, the president continued. His first sergeant, Frederick Fuger, urged him to fall back to the safety of the rear, away from the punishing fire. But Cushing refused, telling Fuger he'd rather "fight it out or die in the attempt."

Bleeding badly and growing weaker every moment, he moved his remaining artillery closer to the front and continued to defend the Union line.

"He used his own thumb to stop his gun's vent, burning his finger to the bone," the president related.

When Cushing was hit the final time, the 22-year-old Soldier fell beside his gun. Obama said Cushing was later immortalized by a poet, who wrote: "His gun spoke out for him once more before he fell to the ground."

In a letter to Cushing's sister, Fuger wrote that "the bravery of their men that day was entirely due to your brother's training and example set on numerous battlefields."

Etched on Cushing's tombstone at West Point is the simple epitaph, "Faithful unto death," the president said. And, his memory will be honored later this month, when a Navy cruiser — the USS Gettysburg — dedicates its officer's dining hall as the "Cushing Wardroom."

Unbeknownst to Cushing, Gettysburg was a turning point in the war, the president said, and it was men like Cushing who were responsible for the victory. Historians often refer to where Pickett's Charge was stopped as the "high water mark of the Confederacy."

When President Lincoln later dedicated the Soldiers' National Cemetery in Gettysburg, he said these men gave their "last full measure of devotion."

Cushing's story "is part of our larger American story — one that continues today," the president concluded. "The spirit, the courage, the determination that he demonstrated lives on in our brave men and women in uniform who this very day are serving and making sure that they are defending the freedoms that Alonzo helped to preserve."

"And, it's incumbent on all of us as Americans to uphold the values that they fight for, and to continue to honor their service long after they leave the battlefield -- for decades, even centuries to come."

Medal long in coming

Margaret Zerwekh, 94, a historian, attended the White House ceremony and was recognized by the president. Zerwekh did research on Cushing's service in the Civil War. She was certain his valorous actions merited the Medal of Honor and lobbied her congressmen for decades to make it happen. She became interested in Cushing's story, since she lives on property in Wisconsin that was once owned by his father.

Typically, the medal is awarded within a few years of the action. Obama said, "but sometimes, even the most extraordinary stories can get lost in the passage of time. No matter how long it takes, it is never too late to do the right thing."

This medal is about more than just one Soldier, Obama said. "It reflects our obligations as a country to the men and women in our armed services; obligations that continue long after they return home, after they remove their uniforms and even, perhaps especially, after they've laid down their lives."

MOH Citation

After the president's remarks, a military aide read the full Medal of Honor citation:

The President of the United States of America, authorized by Act of Congress, March 3rd, 1863, has awarded in the name of Congress the Medal of Honor to 1st Lt. Alonzo H. Cushing, United States Army.

...Confederate forces led by Gen. Robert E. Lee began cannonading 1st Lt. Cushing's position on Cemetery Ridge. Using field glasses, 1st Lt. Cushing directed fire for his own artillery battery. He refused to leave the battlefield after being struck in the shoulder by a shell fragment. As he continued to direct fire, he was struck again -- this time suffering grievous damage to his abdomen.

Still refusing to abandon his command, he boldly stood tall in the face of Maj. Gen. George E. Pickett's charge and continued to direct devastating fire into oncoming forces. As the Confederate forces closed in, 1st Lt. Cushing was struck in the mouth by an enemy bullet and fell dead beside his gun.

His gallant stand and fearless leadership inflicted severe casualties upon Confederate forces and opened wide gaps in their lines, directly impacting the Union force's ability to repel Pickett's charge. First Lt. Cushing's extraordinary heroism and selflessness above and beyond the call of duty at the cost of his own life are in keeping with the highest traditions of military service and reflect great credit upon himself, Battery A, 4th U.S. Artillery, Army of the Potomac, and the United States Army.

Family proud of Civil War hero

By C. Todd Lopez
Army News Service

WASHINGTON – Helen Loring Ensign accepted the Medal of Honor on behalf of her first cousin, twice removed, Alonzo Hereford Cushing, at the White House Nov. 6.

Then-1st Lt. Cushing was killed in combat July 3, 1863, during fighting on the third day of the Battle of Gettysburg. He was later posthumously promoted to brevet lieutenant colonel.

During a media event Nov. 5 in Arlington, Virginia, Ensign said she knew about her Soldier cousin from a young age.

“My father’s name was William Cushing Loring,” Ensign said. “I heard it daily in reference to him and I had to ask who he was. I was under 5 years old when I heard about Cushing. We’ve all gone to Gettysburg, and we’ve seen the plaque for him there.

“We’re delighted to be here to represent our family’s admiration of Mr. Cushing,” Ensign said. “And the Cushing name has been passed down generation to generation. We are proud and happy that he is getting recognition at the White House tomorrow.”

Another cousin of Cushing, Jessica Loring, said this recognition for Alonzo Cushing has provided an opportunity for her family and the other side of the family to meet for the first time. She is a niece of Helen Loring Cushing.

“His whole family was a brave family,” she said of her Soldier cousin. “His mother would say ‘death before dishonor,’ when she sent her sons out to war. Three of them died young. Alonzo Cushing was the first, facing Pickett’s charge at the Bloody Angle at Gettysburg. All of our family has honored the Cushing name down through all generations. All generations, from the start, some child born into the family has kept the name of Cushing.”

She said even her own grandson carries the Cushing name.

Loring said that the paths of Soldiers today parallel Cushing’s story in a couple of ways.

“Alonzo volunteered for his position,” Loring said. “Soldiers today volunteer as well. They are extremely loyal, like Alonzo was, extremely brave and devoted to this country and freedom. And that’s what carries through . . . people going beyond themselves to make the ultimate sacrifice. And everybody out there, in the military, in Afghanistan – wherever they may be – is putting their lives on the line. And I think that’s how this message carries through to the young people in the service today.”

Alonzo Cushing (second from right) while serving on the staff of Maj. Gen. Edwin V. Sumner, in 1862.

The primary force behind getting Cushing recognized with a Medal of Honor was not a relative of Cushing, but rather Margaret Zerwekh, of Delafield, Wisconsin.

While not related to the Cushing family, Zerwekh lives now on the farm that had been owned by the Cushing family. And in Delafield, Cushing is a celebrity. Twenty-seven years ago, in 1987, Zerwekh started an effort to get Cushing the recognition she thought he deserved.

The impetus for all that effort was originally curiosity, Zerwekh said.

“My commitment started with moving to a piece of property, and owning it, and then studying it and who lived there, and what happened to them and where they went to in the country,” she said.

Zerwekh said that as part of her efforts she had been able to trace the Cushing family roots back to the year 1000 in Ireland. About that time, she said, is when she believes the family actually changed their name to Cushing.

Mark Bradley, a historian with the Army Center for Military History, said that Cushing, as a battery commander, was in one of the most dangerous positions during the Battle of Gettysburg.

“I would say that Lieutenant Cushing’s selflessness is evident in his decision to be a battery commander,” Bradley said. “He was a staff officer, and he could have remained a staff officer for the rest of the war and maybe even gone up to higher command in the infantry.”

But Cushing chose to stay a battery commander and that, Bradley said, “indicates he thought he could contribute the most to the Union War effort . . . by putting his life in jeopardy each time the battle was fought, rather than being safe behind the lines, where he might have been as a staff officer. That resulted in his death at Gettysburg.”

Cushing’s first sergeant, Frederick Fuger, also earned the Medal of Honor for the same battle, on the same day. Bradley said Fuger had encouraged Cushing to leave the scene, to go to the hospital, but Cushing had been determined to stay.

“He said he’d fight there and die if necessary,” Bradley said, recounting a conversation between Cushing and Fuger. “His mere presence there, I think, was a tremendous symbolic boost to his men, who incidentally are falling – close to the dozens. Cushing’s stand there at Gettysburg, while we can’t say definitively that it turned the tide of the battle, it contributed to the Union victory. It’s difficult to say what might have happened if Cushing had taken up Fuger’s suggestion and gone to the rear. But he didn’t. And he paid the ultimate sacrifice.”

According to the Army website at www.army.mil/medalofhonor/cushing, Cushing commanded 126 men and six cannons positioned on Cemetery Ridge, July 3, 1863. In the face of Lt. Gen. James Longstreet’s assault, Cushing’s battery took a severe pounding by Confederate artillery. Cushing and his battery stood at the apex of the assault where Confederate Maj. Gen. George Pickett intended to pierce the Union line.

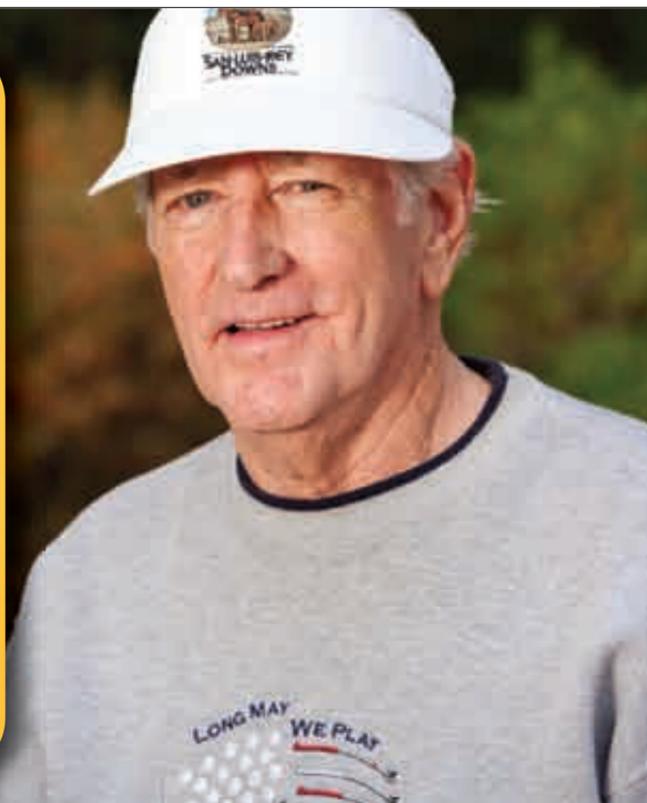

Within just a few hours, all of Cushing’s officers had been killed, and all but two of his guns had been silenced. During the Confederate cannonade, he was wounded in the abdomen, as well as the right shoulder.

Refusing to evacuate, despite his severe wounds, Cushing directed the operation of his two remaining guns – firing in the face of the enemy. When the Confederates were less than 100 yards from his position, Cushing was shot in the head and died instantly.

Cushing’s actions materially aided the Union Army’s successful repulse of the Confederate assault, according to his award narrative. History shows that the Confederacy would be on the defensive from this point forward and never again mount a major offensive.

Guntersville: Where eagles fly

By Brian S. Jones
Alabama Tourism Department

It's the name of a famous song, but Guntersville is truly a place "where eagles fly."

This area in north Alabama attracts so many migrating bald eagles during the winter that Lake Guntersville State Park specifically created an event for folks to come, watch and enjoy the graceful symbol of our American heritage each year.

Eagle Awareness is a must-attend event for bird-watchers and outdoor lovers. Covering six weekends from early January through early February, the event has been a tradition at Lake Guntersville for more than 25 years. The program was started as an activity for people of all ages to experience the joy of watching eagles and other birds in their natural habitat and as a way of educating the public about the importance of protecting the area's wildlife.

Enjoy a stay at Lake Guntersville State Park Lodge

The event kicks off at Lake Guntersville State Park Lodge, located at 1155 Lodge Drive, the centerpiece of the 6,000-acre park. Here, visitors can relax in comfort, enjoying wonderful overnight accommodations as well as exceptional meals at the park's Pinecrest Dining Room. Be sure to inquire about lodging packages and other deals prior to arrival for an Eagle Awareness weekend. After settling into the lodge following check-in, visitors can attend the orientation to learn about the weekend's events. The warm apple cider and music the lodge provides will certainly put you in the mood for your exciting outdoor adventure to eagle nesting sites and beyond.

Be sure and dress for the weather and remember to bring your camera, as there will be plenty of picture-taking opportunities in the great outdoors of north Alabama, particularly around Town Creek. This spot is not only perfect for watching the American bald eagle but enjoying other migratory birds as well.

For more information, call (256) 571-5540.

Take a few field trips

Prepare to get up early and meet in the lobby of the lodge for breakfast and come back later, following your guided day tour, for informative talks, special exhibits and great food. The guided trips begin around 5:30 a.m. and include an easy-to-follow schedule of activities. During your trip to this area, you will discover a series of small grassy islands, each home to an abundance of waterfowl and other birds. Here, you might encounter Canada geese, blue and gray herons, various varieties of ducks and river otters.

Eagle Awareness weekends feature guided field trips, knowledgeable guest speakers and talks from the park naturalist, making the programs both enjoyable and educational. Programs are free and include noted speakers with live birds, magnificent scenery and guided field trips to High Falls Park in Geraldine, Cathedral Caverns in nearby Grant, and waterfowl areas at Guntersville Lake and Dam. The tours are open to the public, so be prepared to have others just show up and be a part of the eagle-watching experience.

Eagle Awareness programs include noted speakers with live birds, magnificent scenery and guided field trips to High Falls Park in Geraldine, Cathedral Caverns in nearby Grant, and waterfowl areas at Guntersville Lake and Dam.

High Falls Park, located at 969 County Road 144 in Grove Oak, is a gorgeous area that has been called a "surprise of nature" and one of Alabama's best-kept secrets. The centerpiece of the 38-acre park is the 35-foot waterfall that spans 300 feet across in some points. At the base of the falls is a 25-foot, arched natural bridge that has been eroded by water over the course of the years. Hikers can get perfect upstream and downstream views of the falls from a pedestrian bridge on the far side of Town Creek. In addition, the park features six hiking trails where you can truly enjoy a get-back-to-nature moment. A day-use park, High Falls is a perfect location for viewing migratory waterfowl, a variety of songbirds, woodpeckers and bald eagles.

For more information, call (256) 659-4683.

The trip to Cathedral Caverns, located at 637 Cave Road in Woodville, is not a bird-watching adventure but a cave tour that's well worth the trip. The first thing you will notice is the large entrance, which measures 126 feet wide and 25 feet high. Inside, you'll find Big Rock Canyon, Mystery River and other natural rock formations such as Stalagmite Mountain, The Frozen Waterfall and Goliath, a stalagmite column that reaches 45 feet to the ceiling of the cave. You can visit anytime — in winter and even in hot summer months — because the cave maintains a comfortable 60-degree temperature. Cathedral Caverns Park is open daily 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

For more information, call (256) 728-8193.

One of the most popular spots for eagle watching is the area around Guntersville Lake and Dam. Guntersville Lake, Alabama's largest, contains 69,100 acres and stretches for 75 miles from Nickajack Dam to Guntersville Dam. The 30-mile-long body of water on the mighty Tennessee River sets the stage for all kinds of outdoor recreational activities, including fishing, boating and camping, and provides a picturesque setting for photographing bald eagles as they fly gracefully through the skies across the scenic landscape of Guntersville or swoop down into the water to catch a fish. While the vast majority of the eagles gather around the dam during the winter months, it's not unusual for many to stay here all year long. Perhaps that's because they have learned what human visitors have known for quite some time — that Lake Guntersville is a beautiful place to hang out in the outdoors. OK, maybe it's the other way around — humans have taken their cue from the birds.

101 Inventions That Changed the World

The U.S. Space & Rocket Center in Huntsville will host the 101 Inventions That Changed the World exhibit now through March 25. Center officials said that certain turning points in humankind's history have been defined by the creation or discovery of something profound. From stone tools to the birth of the Internet, driven by necessity and accident people have shaped their own destiny through invention. These inventions act as historical punctuation points in the story of 101 Inventions That Changed the World. The exhibit's story explores not only the inventions themselves, but also suggests the reasoning behind their development and their subsequent effect on humankind. The exhibit has been made available by Grande Exhibitions of Australia.

To get to the center, take Exit 15 off of I-565. For more information, visit <http://www.rocketcenter.com>.

Scarecrows in the Park

Lake Frank Jackson State Park in Opp will host more than 300 scarecrows spread along its trails now through Nov. 30 from 7 a.m. to sunset. # Rising Star performs at White House

Installation Management Command
Press Release

JOINT BASE SAN ANTONIO — Sgt. Christiana Ball, the 2013 winner of Operation Rising Star, was invited to participate in the music annual gala called “In Performance at the White House,” Nov. 6. The event was hosted by President Barack and First Lady Michelle Obama.

Her star has been rising all year in a series of musical performances culminating in the nation’s Capital.

“I’ve had an unbelievable year as the winner of Op Rising Star. Singing at the White House will be a great honor,” said Ball. “This is a once in a lifetime opportunity to reach out and show my appreciation of my veteran brothers and sisters both past and present. Even in these stressful times, I’m focused on the idea that I get to be part of such a fantastic tribute.”

“A Salute to the Troops: In Performance at the White House” served as a celebration of the men and women who serve the United States, featuring such nationally recognized acts as Mary J. Blige, John Fogerty and Willie Nelson, according to a White House press release. Grammy award winner Don Was was the music director.

Ball, a 787th Military Police Battalion drill sergeant, outperformed 12 finalists from Army garrisons around the world and won the Army Entertainment’s annual Operation Rising Star competition, conducted by the U.S. Army Installation Management Command.

“Rising Star has already opened so many doors for me to perform in my Fort Leonard Wood (Missouri) community, as well as to sing for televised sporting events and military ceremonies,” said Ball. “I’m so grateful for having performed on national TV as a part of the Academy of Country Music Awards ‘Salute to the Troops,’ and I sang a duet with Lee Brice on his hit ‘I Drive Your Truck’ – a song which captures perfectly the emotion of a survivor working through their pain of loss and grief.”

The Army’s Operation Rising Star program gives active-duty Service members and family members a unique opportunity to entertain their comrades around the world, and fulfill their own personal musical ambitions. The competition starts at the garrison and finalists are chosen from among the local winners to compete at Fort Sam Houston, Texas.

The 2014 competition is currently under way and the new Operation Rising Star winner will be selected in December. More information about Operation Rising Star can be found at <http://www.OpRisingStar.com>.

“I was invited to be a judge for Fort Leonard Wood’s [Operation Rising Star] this year,” said Ball. “So I have definitely been following this year’s competition and am very excited to see what talent ends up competing down in San Antonio for the finals this year.”

“I’ve seen first-hand the positive effect that music has had and made on Soldier’s lives,” said Ball. “Programs like ‘In Performance’ give Soldiers a chance to get the recognition they deserve, and Operation Rising Star gives them an outlet and a chance to better themselves personally. It automatically makes for a more well-adjusted, purposeful and resilient Soldier.”

The entire performance at the White House was broadcast on Veterans Day via the American Forces Network to American service men and women and civilians at U.S. Department of Defense locations around the world.

“In Performance at the White House” was created by WETA and has been produced every year, since 1978. WETA is the PBS affiliate serving the nation’s capital. PBS is a non-profit network headquartered in Arlington, Virginia, with over 350 television stations distributing shows such as “Sesame Street” and “Antiques Roadshow.”

This year, the “In Performance at the White House” series was part of the Joining Forces initiative.

Ball is slated to take part in a special daytime interactive student workshop “The Stars and Stripes Forever: A History of Music and the Military,” for high school students from military communities in the greater Washington, D.C., Maryland and Virginia areas. Featured performers from the evening event will share their experiences as well as answer student questions about the music and entertainment world.

American society in support of our service members and their families. These efforts, championed First Lady Michelle Obama and Dr. Jill Biden, create opportunities for all Americans to stand up and show their gratitude for those who have done so much for the nation, through wellness, education and employment opportunities.

“When I perform, I look in the eyes of my audience and try to connect in a personal way,” said Ball. “What do I see? I guess it just depends. If I’m singing to my people in Fort Leonard Wood, I often see a lot of pride in their faces, and rightly so. I can’t wait to bring my voice now to an even wider audience. I’m representing the U.S. Army.”

Ball will soon complete her active-duty contract and plans on joining the Missouri National Guard. The Army believes that every service man or woman who lives the Army values and retires is a Soldier for life.

“I’ve created a band of my own now and have been performing as much as my job allows me. Our plan is to take off and do as many shows as I can,” said Ball. “It will be an honor to have a chance work with the National Guard band, too. I can’t wait.”

NEW UNIFORM, SAME COMMITMENT

Grady Wilson first served his country in the skies over Vietnam. Today he brings the same level of commitment to his job and our nation flight testing UH-72A Lakota helicopters for the Army. Grady serves at our assembly plant in Columbus, Miss., part of a largely military veteran workforce. These veterans have delivered more than 300 Lakotas – all on time and on budget – and are proud the Army has selected Lakota as its next primary flight trainer: New uniforms, but the same commitment.

WINTER WORKOUTS

Fitness centers help keep patrons fit, out of cold

By Nathan Pfau
Army Flier Staff Writer

Working out can seem like a daunting task, especially during the winter months when the warm indoors seems so inviting, but Fort Rucker has ways for people to get their workouts in while staying warm.

Fort Rucker's physical fitness centers include an abundance of indoor fitness activities to keep people working out through the cold winter months, including fitness classes, fitness equipment, sports, swimming and even personal trainers, said Kris Rach, Fort Rucker fitness specialist and certified personal trainer.

"We have many group fitness classes available at both Fortenberry-Colton Physical Fitness Center and the Fort Rucker Physical Fitness Center, and we also have an indoor, heated pool here at the Fort Rucker Physical Fitness Center that people can utilize for exercise and therapy," she said, adding that the pool is open seven days a week. "Both gyms offer ample cardio equipment, different weightlifting equipment, different classes and instructors, so there's a lot to do here as long as you put your mind to it."

The fitness centers offer traditional classes, such as an Ab Lab, which targets abdominal workouts, and spin classes, which utilize indoor cycling to help people reach their fitness goals, as well as some non-traditional workouts, such as kickboxing and a Rockwall Workshop.

The Rockwall Workshop is a basic climbing skills workshop that requires no experience, no signup and is free to those who wish to participate. The workshop is held Saturdays at 10 a.m. and is instructed by a volunteer who is happy to help those interested in rock climbing, said Rach. "It's a good way to get your indoor workout."

Other classes include Cardio Strength Intervals, which alternates athletic cardio workouts and strength training; Functional Athletic Strength Training, which builds strength and conditioning through challenging workouts; Hip Hop workouts, which utilize hip hop dance moves to get a good cardio workout; Strong Bodies, which works every muscle from every angle; Ultimate Conditioning, which combines weightlifting, cardio and functional lifting; Yoga, which is a complete body workout that strengthens both body and mind; and a plethora of combination classes that combine multiple workouts to give a full workout experience.

The fitness centers also provide personal training, with trainers dedicated to making sure participants get the workouts they're looking for, said the fitness specialist.

Although the winter months are fast approaching, Rach said that it doesn't get so cold in the South that people must refrain from all outdoor workouts.

"It doesn't get super cold in Alabama like it does in the northern regions, but people still need to make sure to bundle up when doing their outdoor workouts," she said. "There are bike trails on Fort Rucker that people can use to work out during the cold months, such as the Beaver Lake trails."

Before heading outdoors, however, Rach suggests that people take the proper precautions.

"When it's 30-40 degrees, even when you're bundled up, you can possibly dehydrate faster because you don't feel it. When running in winter running gear, some people tend to sweat more, so they need to make sure they are still hydrating," she said. "Also, if it's super cold and people aren't acclimated to running in cold temperatures, they should make sure to take their time with their workouts and know their limitations."

For those who are more experienced fitness nuts, the Winter Boot Camp will be available in January, which features a six-week program of tough physical fitness routines that promises to get people to shape up or ship out, said Rach.

For those who aren't into a more intense workout, people can take part in the run/walk club, in which participants can rack up miles and earn patches and recognition for hitting certain milestones.

Rach said whatever people's fitness levels, however, they should make a conscious effort to keep physically active during the winter months. "There really is no reason not to work out all year long, especially if you live in the South."

Pre-diabetes: Many at risk for disease

By Amy Cowell
U.S. Army Public Health Command

November is the American Diabetes Association's American Diabetes Month featuring programs designed to focus the nation's attention on the issues surrounding diabetes and the many people who are impacted by the disease.

Nearly 30 million children and adults in the United States are living with diabetes and another 86 million are pre-diabetic — having a blood sugar level higher than normal, but not high enough for a diagnosis of diabetes.

These individuals are at risk for developing Type 2 diabetes. That means that nearly one in three Americans have pre-diabetes, yet the vast majority of people with pre-diabetes do not even know they have it.

This is particularly troubling because without lifestyle changes to improve their health, 15 to 30 percent of people with pre-diabetes will develop Type 2 diabetes within five years. Women who have had diabetes while pregnant and people of African-American, Hispanic/Latino, American-Indian, Asian-American, or Pacific-Islander background are at increased risk.

KID'S CORNER

Junior Whirl by Hal Kaufman

SLIM UP! You are asked to complete the addition problem at right by inserting digits 1-7 in such a way that each digit in the lower three rows is one more than the digit immediately above it. To begin, for instance, insert 2 under 1, number 2, etc. (repeating digits as necessary) until all boxes are filled. What is the sum? It is simply a matter of digit positioning. See if you can work it out.

WORD PLAY! You can make TEA HOT in five steps! Change one letter in each step to form a new word. Can you do it?

WINNING WAY WITH WORDS

You can WIN every step of the way in this exercise. Object is to find progressively step-by-step WIN words in order with these definitions:

- Take all the marbles (WIN, in play).
- Eye-flicker signal.
- Show pain with a grimace.
- Starry time.
- Broadleaf's hair.
- Airplane measurement.
- Largest lake in Wisconsin.
- How quickly can you find all of the words?

Time limit: 2 min.

Ebola treatment unit for medical workers to open

The suspected ward of the Monrovia Medical Unit, which is an Ebola treatment facility specifically built for medical workers who become infected while caring for patients, stands silent before opening. Once open, this ward will house patients who are Ebola symptomatic but are awaiting their lab work to return. If they are tested positive, then they are moved to the confirmed ward, which is nearly identical to this one.

MONROVIA, Liberia – The Monrovia Medical Unit, an Ebola treatment unit constructed specifically for the treatment of medical workers who were infected while caring for Ebola patients, is scheduled to open Saturday, located about 30 miles outside Monrovia.

“The Monrovia Medical Unit, otherwise known as an MMU, is different than an Ebola treatment unit – ETU – because our main purpose is to give hope to doctors and nurses as we will be treating any suspected or infected cases that happen around West Africa,” said Lt. Shane Deckert, the MMU facility engineer, with the U.S. Public Health Service.

No other facility like this exists, said Lt. Col. Lee Hicks, the Joint Forces Command-United Assistance command engineer.

“If an aide worker gets sick, they bring them to the MMU to get taken care of by the U.S. Public Health Service,” said Hicks. “It’s an incentive for health care workers to go work in an ETU, knowing that if they get sick, they’ll be taken care of.”

The 25-bed facility was constructed from the ground up by a team of Navy Seabees, Soldiers and Airmen from Joint Forces Command-United Assistance, and will be operated by personnel from the U.S. Public Health Service, said Hicks.

Before arriving to Liberia to help construct and run the MMU, medical personnel from the U.S. Public Health Service contacted other treatment facilities to compile and absorb as much information on best practices for ETUs, said Cmdr. Tom Janisko, a phy-sician’s assistant with U.S. Public Health Service who will be working in preventative medicine there.

Once on the ground in Liberia, the U.S. Public Health Service team trained extensively before doing rounds at an active ETU, he said.

The MMU compound is separated into two – one side is the low-risk zone for medical workers and support staff; the other side is the high-risk zone for suspected and infected patients, he said.

The structure consists of 12 tents, four that make up an administrative area for staff members and eight that make up three wards for patients and other necessary services, said Deckert.

The administrative tents are where all the behind-the-scenes work happens – the ordering of personal protective gear, scheduling, processing of paperwork, eating meals.

The high-risk zone is where the patients reside and receive treatment. Because of the contagious nature of the disease, the two halves do not connect in any way.

“The most acute ward would be for the patients who have Ebola,” said Janisko. This is the confirmed ward.

The other two wards are: one for patients suspected of having Ebola and a flex ward that will be used as needed, said Janisko. Patients will be cared for in the suspected ward while they wait for their blood tests to come back from the on-site laboratory.

“There’s nothing else like the MMU in Liberia,” said Hicks. “It has everything to take care of folks who may have Ebola or do have Ebola and help them recover from that deadly virus. It’s the first time it’s ever been built like this and used in this type of fashion.”

Along with the laboratory, there is a pharmacy, behavioral health section, and a patient reception area on the grounds as well, said Janisko. Restrooms and showers are located behind the wards.

The reception area is unlike most in that it is outdoors. The patients speak to their friends and family members through a windowless structure that is six feet away from a similar structure on the other side of the compound’s fence.

Studies have shown that when Ebola is emitted from a patient due to a sneeze or spittle from a cough, it dies before traveling about a meter, said Janisko.

The entire fenced-in compound is nearly self-contained, needing only resupply of water, fuel and food, said Deckert. Fuel supplies two large generators that power the electricity and one small generator that powers the perimeter lighting. The water is for cleaning and decontaminating personnel and equipment.

Every detail was thought out, said Deckert. The complex is built on a slope so that any infectious materials or fluids would drain away from the safe zone in case of heavy rainfall.

There’s also an incinerator on site to dispose of used personal protective equipment so that no trace of the virus leaves the compound, said Deckert.

Health: Lifestyle changes can help prevent diabetes

have pre-diabetes, because early treatment can prevent serious problems that diabetes can cause, such as loss of eyesight or kidney damage. Several risk factors increase a person’s risk for pre-diabetes. Take the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention’s test below to see if you are at risk.

Take the test — know your score

Answer these seven simple questions and add up your score to see your risk level.

Q: Are you a woman who has had a baby weighing more than 9 pounds at birth? (yes: 1 point;

no: 0 points.

Q: Do you have a sister or brother with diabetes? (yes: 1 point; no: 0 points)

Q: Do you have a parent with diabetes? (yes: 1 point; no: 0 points)

Q: Are you younger than 65 years of age and get little or no exercise in a typical day? (yes: 5 points; no: 0 points)

Q: Are you between 45 and 64 years of age? (yes: 5 points; no: 0 points)

Q: Are you 65 years of age or older? (yes: 9 points; no: 0 points)

Q: Do you weigh as much as or more than the weight listed for your height? (see chart below) (yes: 5 points; no: 0 points)

Height Weight (lbs)

4’10”	129
4’11”	133
5’0”	138
5’1”	143
5’2”	147
5’3”	152
5’4”	157
5’5”	162
5’6”	167
5’7”	172
5’8”	177
5’9”	182
5’10”	188
5’11”	193
6’0”	199
6’1”	204
6’2”	210
6’3”	216
6’4”	221

For each “yes” answer, add the number of points listed. All “no” answers are 0 points.

If your score is 3-8

This means your risk is probably low for having pre-diabetes now. Keep your risk low. If you are overweight, lose weight. Be active most days, and don’t use tobacco. Eat low-fat meals with fruits, vegetables and whole-grain foods. If you have high cholesterol or high blood pressure, talk to your health care provider about your risk for Type 2 diabetes.

If your score is 9 or more

This means your risk is high for having pre-diabetes now. Make an appointment with your health care provider soon.

Make a change for life

The good news is that those who are pre-diabetic can avoid becoming diabetic and even reverse their pre-diabetic status through lifestyle changes. Research shows that modest weight loss and regular physical activity can help prevent or delay Type 2 diabetes by up to 58 percent in people with pre-diabetes. Modest weight loss means 5 percent to 7 percent of body weight, which is 10 to 14 pounds for a 200-pound person. Getting at least 150 minutes each week of physical activity, such as brisk walking, also is important for prevention.
