Emotions ran high as Fort Rucker said goodbye to one of its leaders and welcomed a new command sergeant major during the change of responsibility ceremony at the U.S. Army Aviation Museum Tuesday.

The official portion of the ceremony kicked off with the traditional passing of the noncommissioned officer sword from the outgoing Aviation Branch Command Sgt. Maj. Tod L. Glidewell, to Maj. Gen. Anthony G. Crutchfield, U.S. Army Aviation Center of Excellence and Fort Rucker commanding general, to the incoming Aviation Branch Command Sgt. Mai. James H. Thomson. The passing of the sword signifies the relinquishing of the responsibility and authority from the outgoing to the incoming CSM.

The ceremony began as Glidewell's wife, Toni, and their daughters, Ashlee and April, were presented with red roses. Similar yellow roses were presented to Thomson's wife, Jennifer, and mother, Patricia, representing their arrival to the U.S. Army Aviation Center of Excellence.

While Fort Rucker says goodbye to one of its leaders, it welcomes new leadership in Thomson, who was chosen by Crutchfield as the new Aviation Branch CSM because, according to Crutchfield, he is articulate, smart, dedicated and has a vision for the Army.

"I'm truly honored and consider it a privilege to serve these heroes [of Fort Rucker]," said Thomson. "Jen and I absolutely adore Fort Rucker and are in love with the charm of the surrounding Wiregrass, and we're looking forward to bringing our Family down here.

"I'm excited about what the future holds for Army Aviation," he said, "and I'm committed to serving the talented Soldiers, civilians and Families of our great Branch."

Thomson went on to thank his parents for the example they set with over 40 years of service to the nation; Crutchfield for the opportunity to serve the Soldiers, civilians and Families of the Aviation Branch: Glidewell for his leadership and the example he set for everyone to follow: and his wife and children for their love, support and sacrifice.

"I have total confidence in [Thomson] and I want everyone here to know that [it] is unwavering, and I'm proud to have [him] on the team as my newest battle-buddy," said Crutchfield. "Although I hate to see [Glidewell] go, I know that our Branch is in great hands, our Army is in great hands, and [Glidewell] will continue to do the great work that [he's] done."

Army AFAP Conference ranks Rucker issue as No. 1

By Nathan Pfau

Army Flier Staff Writer

Keeping Army Families in mind, a committee for Fort Rucker's Army Family Action Plan program submitted the No. 1 issue for the Army to tackle at this year's Army-level AFAP Conference in Arlington, Va., March 2.

The Fort Rucker retiree/survivor workgroup submitted an issue at the installation AFAP conference in October that not only went to the national-level conference, but was marked as the No. 1 issue to Individual installations hold annual AFAP conferences where representatives of the community are selected to form workgroups to identify, develop and prioritize issues believed to be important to maintain a good standard of living, said Shellie Kelly, AFAP and Army Family Team Building program manager.

The issue that was pushed to the national-level conference pertained to the Survivor Investment of Military Death Gratuity and Service Member's Group Life Insurance and the time allotment of 12 months that was given to place the full amount awarded into a Roth individual retirement fund or Coverdell Education Savings Account, according to Susan James, who attended the national-level conference as an AFAP delegate and representative of a warrant officer's wife.

"When [a Soldier is lost] in combat, the [surviving Family] gets a death gratuity, which is a large sum of money that they are given," she explained. "The [survivor] is given a timeframe of 12 months to invest that money.'

The retiree/survivor workgroup and the committee that James was a part of felt that the 12-month time period was not sufficient enough for survivors to make decisions about investment options regarding the sum awarded, so they are pushing to have the time extended to 36 months, according to

The Fort Rucker AFAP committee working to push the issue also included a Gold Star Family member, who is the survivor of a Soldier, she said, which helped the committee get a first-hand perspective on the issue.

"You're trying to get your life back together," she said. "In her case, she had to move back from Germany with her Family ... and she wasn't think-

Event connects industry representatives, Army Aviators

Fort Rucker's Aviation Training Industry Day proved to be a "huge success," according to an organizer.

The event, held March 22 at The Landing, was designed as a way to bring Aviation industry representatives to post to interact with the Soldiers and trainers who use the products they provide, according to Lt. Col Michael Hansen, chief of the Operations Division at Fort Rucker's Directorate of Simulation.

The day-long event included addresses from Maj. Gen. Anthony G. Crutchfield, U.S. Army Aviation Center of Excellence and Fort Rucker commanding general; Ellis Golson from the Capabilities Development Integration Directorate; and Col. Jessie Farrington, USAACE deputy commander, as well as a Fort Rucker leadership panel question and answer session.

Hansen said 41 companies had displays at The Landing, but representatives from about 50 companies attended the event.

Robert Abascal, the president of AVT

Simulation, called the event a "one-stop shop" because so many people, both industry representatives and Soldiers, had easy access to the event

At larger Aviation conferences, his training-focused company can get lost in the crowd, he explained, but at Fort Rucker's industry day, he was able to learn about where his customers - Army Aviators - are coming from.

"We're not selling. We're doing a lot of listening," Abascal said.

Crutchfield emphasized the need for that kind of dialogue in his welcoming ad-

"We're not buying anything today," he said. "We're going to talk about the things that are needed for the future. Perhaps some of the formal discussions in here and down on the floor will lead to ideas and solutions for tomorrow's technologies and

In the same address, Crutchfield gave the industry partners two key points to consider as the day continued. First he challenged them to better understand the transition from an Army at war to an Army that prepares to go to war. Second, he said, the nature of wars the Army has faced for the past 10 years isn't necessarily the blueprint for the future.

"I know we've got a lot to do," Crutchfield said. "Today is only a start. I don't see us coming up with solutions to everything. But you've brought some of your things here that we can at least start the dialogue, and at least see if those things right now are compatible with the Army Learning Concept and what we in the branch need.'

According to Hansen, the plans for industry day started late last year when a small group from Fort Rucker was preparing to go to a major training and simulation conference in Orlando. Because so few people are able to attend the Orlando conference and similar events, Col. Stephen Seitz, the director of the Directorate of Simulation, wanted to find a way to bring some of the Army industry partners to Fort Rucker.

The result was Aviation Training Industry Day where vendors were offered reasonably priced spaces and access to a majority of aviation trainers. Hansen said, adding that all Fort Rucker personnel were

Plans for more vendor space and increased attendance are already being discussed for next year, he said, but the intent is to keep the event on Fort Rucker

Dennis Hoffman, business development manager at Boeing Training Systems, said he doesn't think a magazine article or other publicity effort would accomplish as much as the conference did.

"Hearing (the Army's) vision about the new go-to-war approach is enlightening,'

Throughout the day, budget cuts and the nearing drawdown were recurring themes. Golson asked the industry partners to consider how the Army would maintain its edge with fewer resources.

We are going to have to maintain our edge with capability with how we execute our training, how well we train, how well we practice and employ what we have," he said. Because of this, solutions to training challenges must be flexible and adaptable.

"If we develop a tool or training that is

Families can take steps to prevent lost or stolen pets

By Navy Lt. Theresa Donnelly American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — A missing pet can be a devastating experience for Family members and can result in a dangerous situation for the animal. However, military Families can take steps to keep their beloved pets safe and secure.

If your pet lives indoors or is supervised outdoors, it's less likely the pet will become lost or stolen. Many animals crave human companionship and do quite well lounging on a comfortable couch or bed during the day.

However, if you can't take your pet out for exercise, make sure they play in a safe, secure and enclosed area with necessary shelter, water and food. You also should avoid the use of chains or ropes for long periods of time. U.S. Humane Society studies indicate that animals become territorial and aggressive when tied up on chains for a prolonged time. Animals are more likely to bite another human or could unintentionally hang themselves if tethered too close to a

If a pet becomes lost, a microchip can help reunite pet and owner. This is a tiny computer chip, about the size of a grain of rice, inserted into the skin of the animal with an identification number programmed into it. A national registry tracks the number, and any organization with a scanner can identify the number and contact the company owning the device. The company then will contact the pet owner or another emergency contact. Since registration tags are easily removable, the microchip provides an additional layer of protection.

Microchips can be implanted during a routine veterinary office visit - no surgery or anesthesia required - in animals as young as eight weeks, according to the American Veterinary Medical Association.

Because of this critical method of pet identification, animals have been found more than 1,000 miles from their home or after years of separation.

In 2009, The Ohio State University's College of Veterinary Indoor Pet Initiative conducted a study of 53 shelters with recorded information on animals entering a shelter with a microchip. The findings revealed that 73 percent of owners of stray dogs and cats were found, and 74 percent of the owners wanted their animals back. The top reason owners couldn't be located was incorrect or disconnected phone numbers, followed by the owner's failure to return phone calls or respond to letters.

Along with microchips, owners also should legally register their pet since it's the primary way shelters track pet ownership.

"One of our most important goals is to get lost pets home, which reduces impact on the shelter in devoting resources to tracking owners," said Matt Malta, director of adoptions for the Hawaiian Humane Society. "Licensing is considered legal proof of ownership, and pet owners should consider compliance that will help establish their animals as rightfully theirs"

According to Malta, less than 20 percent of Oahu dog owners are in compliance with assuring that their dog is always wearing a valid, county-issued license. Many companion animals end up at shelters as strays and can't be reunited with owners due to missing registration and microchip information.

In fact, less than 2 percent of cats and only 15 to 20 percent of dogs are returned to their owners, according to the National Council on Pet Population Study and Policy.

Many shelters offer discounted services for microchips and ensure their animals are adopted out with microchips.

Check your military base or housing installation for the companion animal policies, as housing pet policies stipulate microchips and registration or animal licensing requirements. When moving to a new duty station or when considering getting a pet, it's critical potential owners research local animal laws and housing animal policies if living on base to ensure compli-

Should the pet accidentally get loose on a military installation, immediately call base police, base animal control, if applicable, and your community's official lost and found center for companion ani-

If the neighborhood permits it, post signs and check online net classifieds for found pet postings and consider placing a lost pet posting to alert other members in your neighborhood.

We all can help to raise awareness of this issue by talking to our neighbors about pet resources and providing help when needed. These steps can protect our pets and enhance the human-animal bond among pet owners.

Spring clean-up effort starts Tuesday

By Angela Williams Army Flier Staff Writer

A little work on everyone's part during spring clean-up can make a big difference.

"And that's what we want," said Willie Rucker, a Directorate of Public Works construction representative who has helped coordinate the event for the past several years. "We want Fort Rucker to look like it should look. We just want everybody to get out there and participate.'

The three-day event starts Tuesday when all units. Soldiers and civilians are asked to clean up inside buildings and office spaces. On Wednesday, everyone will be asked to move outside to clean up around buildings and any other outdoor spaces they are responsible for. Thursday is divided into two sections. Thursday morning is a make-up day for whatever wasn't finished the previous two days. Thursday afternoon Soldiers living in the barracks are asked to clean those areas both inside and out, according to Rucker.

Everyone has a designated area to clean on post, Rucker said, adding that maps marking those areas are available.

During spring clean-up days, three large, clearly-labeled dumpsters will be placed at convenient locations around post. One will be near the Warrant Officer Career College off Andrews Avenue. Another will be on Red Cloud Road in front of the elementary school. The third dumpster will be on Third Avenue near the car wash, said Rucker.

If an area has too much trash to transport to a dumpster, a five-ton truck will be making rounds to collect garbage. The drivers will collect boxes and bags left on the side of the road, but Rucker asks that people call him at 255-9273 to schedule a pick-up.

"If you don't call, try to put the trash out along the street where we can see it - just don't block the dumpsters," he said.

Also during the clean-up event, Bldg. 1315 is designated as a drop-off point for hazardous waste such as batteries, paint, command sergeant major and paint thinner and fluorescent bulbs. Turn-in of government furniture and property can be coordinated through the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office in Bldg. 1211.

On Friday, after the scheduled cleaning activities are finished, the garrison command sergeant major, the United States Army Aviation Center of Excellence the DPW sergeant major will tour post to see the results of the clean-up efforts, Rucker said.

"This is one time a year. We ask that everybody get inside and spruce up those areas, then get outside and spruce up those areas," he said, adding that DPW is there to assist.

Army Career Tracker available to one-third of civilian workforce

By Julia Bobick

Army G3/5/7 Civilian Training and Leader Development Division

Employees in seven more Civilian Career Programs now have access to Army Career Tracker, the Army's first comprehensive leader development and career management tool that integrates training, assignment history, education and experiential learning into one personalized, user-friendly online interface for all Army personnel.

First implemented for enlisted Soldiers, ACT expanded to officers and Army civilians in the fall. Thirteen of the Army's 31 Civilian Career Programs - comprising about one-third of the Army's Civilian Workforce - now have access: CP 10, 11, 12, 13, 17, 18, 22, 24, 27, 31, 32 and

The next Civilian Career Programs set to spiral into ACT at the end of March are CP 14, 16, 20, 26, 29 and 33. All Career Programs - in addition to all enlisted and officer career management fields (of all active and Reserve components) - are scheduled to be in ACT by the end of Army leadership wants to ensure all members of the professional Army Civilian Corps have a deliberate career path to follow, Under Secretary of the Army Dr. Joseph W. Westphal said during the 2011 Association of the U.S. Army annual meeting, adding that "employees will be able to receive education, training and development in those career paths so they can grow in the Army and provide greater expertise in their jobs."

ACT also aligns civilian training and career development with the goals of Army Learning Concept 2015 and supports civilian workforce transformation initiatives.

The Army Career Tracker empowers Army civilians to effectively take ownership of their professional career and leader development," said Vicki Brown, chief of Civilian Training and Leader Development, Army G-37. "One of our goals is to ensure all Army civilians know the tools

Employees are encouraged to access ACT at least monthly to communicate with their leaders, supervisors and mentors about career development goals and obtain the latest news and information tailored to their career program and individual needs.

Users are also expected to use ACT to create and track their personal and professional career development goals. Users can search multiple education and training resources, monitor their career development and receive personalized advice from their leaders.

The system allows civilian and military supervisors and mentors to monitor their employees' goals and provide them developmental recommendations, notifications and career advice. Supervisors will be able to view records for both their civilian and military employees.

In addition, those civilians who are also part-time in uniform are able to view both their military and civilian records through this one portal.

Part of the 2011 Army Campaign Plan, Army Learning Concept 2015 and the civilian workforce transformation initiatives, Army Career Tracker is managed by the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command. The system leverages existing Army systems to capture and present career management data; it does not replace or eliminate current systems and programs.

AAFES price matching

With smart phones becoming more prevalent as shopping tools, price matching is becoming increasingly popular and the Army and Air Force Exchange Service is getting in on the trend with its "We'll Match It!" program to ensure military shoppers at Fort Rucker pay the lowest price possible.

Depending on the item, according to local AAFES officials, price matches can be done with or without a competitor's ad a price difference of less than $10 is matched on the spot while pricing discrepancies greater than $10 are matched with a current local competitor's ad. In either scenario, products must be identical.

"We even offer a 14-day price guarantee on any item originally purchased from the exchange," said Patricia Austin, Fort Rucker Exchange general manager. "So, if an item is sold at a lower price by the exchange, or any local competitor, the price can be matched up to two weeks after the purchase."

The Exchange Catalog and shopmyexchange.com also match lower prices, including shipping and handling, from to Hunstville where he will be the new CSM at Aviation and Missle Life Cycle Management Command at Redstone Arsenal, according to Crutchfield.

"Tm saying goodbye to my sergeant." he said. "Every Soldier has a sergeant, and for the past 18 months, Glidewell has been my sergeant. He ensured that I was taken care of, made sure that I was following the standard and made sure that I knew the standard — never compromising. That's why it's hard to say goodbye."

Glidewell served as Aviation Branch CSM for the last three years, taking care of Soldier issues, maintenance-related issues, and taking care of Families, civilians and contractors, said the major general, adding that the outgoing CSM served to make a better quality of life for 4,000 Soldiers and 13,000 Family members.

The outgoing CSM also oversaw 63,000 acres of training land and nearly 2,400 facilities making sure that Fort Rucker's aircraft were ready to fly to "train America's greatest Aviators," said Crutchfield.

"Today I pass the reigns as the [Aviation] Branch CSM, and I have many to thank," said Glidewell. "Although Jim and I passed the sword a few moments ago commemorating the event, this event is truly about our Army and how our Army

"Survivors face many challenges after the death of a loved one," said Kelly. "To ask them to make life altering decisions ... so soon after the death places even more stress on the grieving survivor - resulting in poor deci-

This is the reason that the committee is looking to have the time allotment extended, to give grieving Families more time to make important financial decisions that could potentially further affect the future of their Family, said James.

AFAP committee members from Fort Rucker decided that the death gratuity issue was to be pushed as their top issue after two days of deliberation, according to James.

"It was a no brainer," she said. "Nothing else has to be put in place in order for this to be passed."

Issues are decided upon and prioritized in four different groups, said James. These groups are classified as medical and dental, Family support, Soldier support and personal wellbeing.

James was a member of the personal wellbeing group.

"Each group had about 12 issues that they had to work on and prioritize," she said. "There were a total of eight issues that were pushed up, two from each group, and they were ranked one through eight. When our issue ended up being the No. 1 issue, I really felt like our voice was heard."

Issues such as the death gratuity time allotment can be submitted to AFAP by people in the community that see a problem that needs to be addressed, said Kelly. People can bring that issue to attention by soliciting it 2011 AFAP conference wasn't an ters.'

throughout the installation and submitting them to the AFAP program manager.

"About 90 percent of AFAP issues are retained and worked at a local level, which results in ongoing community improvements," said the program manager, "but some are applicable beyond the local level. These [issues] are sent to mid-level conferences and some that are beyond the scope of that ... are forwarded to the HODA AFAP conference."

issue that could be dealt with on a local level and was therefore pushed up to the next level and so on, she said.

James says that AFAP gives a voice to everyone on the installation from an enlisted Soldier's spouse to a general's spouse, adding that issues are always taken seriously and the person submitting the issue will always be contacted regarding their issue.

"If they can't address your issue,[for any reason], they will explain to you why they can't do it," she said. "It really makes you feel like you and your issue mat-

Army captain awarded Silver Star for heroism under fire

By U.S. Navy Petty Officer 1st Class Bill Steele RC-East PAO

BAGRAM AIRFIELD, Afghanistan — U.S. Army Capt. Ivan Torres, a soldier who finds calm in the chaos of combat, was awarded the Silver Star for placing himself in the line of fire to try to save his squad members and protect wounded Afghan Soldiers.

Torres, a native of Killeen, Texas, and commander of the 1st Cavalry Division Headquarters Services Company at Combat Outpost Red Hill, was involved in a fire fight last fall, while leading a company of U.S. and Afghan Soldiers during Operation Thunderdome, a mission to clear Taliban insurgents from the Qowl-e Her Valley in western Parwan Province. Before the operation, the area was known as a Taliban stronghold.

U.S. Army Maj. Gen. Daniel Allyn, Regional Command East and 1st Cavalry Division commander presented the award March 18, and praised Torres' quick thinking and ability to maintain composure in a situation that could have ended very badly for coalition forces.

"At the end of the day, he lived up to the legacy that is the 1st Cavalry Division," Allyn said.

Torres and his company of about 85 Soldiers ran into trouble as they were making their way south on the main road through the village of Khoshkak, Khoshkak is considered the most forested and steeplysloped village in Qowl-e Her, and this is where a large Taliban force ambushed them.

U.S. Army Maj. Gen. Daniel Allyn, Regional Command East and 1st Cavalry Division commander, awards the Silver Star Medal to Capt. Ivan Torres, an infantry commander from Killeen, Texas, assigned to the 1st Cavalry Division's Headquarters Services Company at Combat Outpost Red Hill in Parwan Province, March 18. Torres was honored for his actions during Operation Thunderdome, a combat operation conducted in the Qowl-e Her Valley Sept. 21.

the start of the operation led Torres and his planners to believe that if the Taliban were to strike, they would most likely wait until night time, and that enemy strength would be anywhere from 50 to 80 at most. Instead, they met a force that was twice that size and dug into several defensive strongpoints on three dominating mountain rid-gelines. They were armed to the teeth. When the Taliban opened fire, at about 7:30 a.m., there was total chaos.

"After maybe 15 seconds of the first shot being fired, the tree line essentially evaporated," Torres recalled. "We had obviously walked into a kill zone."

Within minutes, one Afghan National Army soldier lay dead. Several Taliban were also killed.

Pinned down by withering Taliban machine gun and sniper fire, punctuated with rocket-propelled grenades and mortars, Torres' lead platoon became isolated south of

What happened over the next eight hours earned Torres the U.S.

Downed aircraft recovery teams operate in extreme conditions

By Maj. Kenric Smith RC-East PAO

BAGRAM AIRFIELD, Afghanistan — The 82nd Combat Aviation Brigade's Task Force Atlas is known for the numerous aircraft phase inspections that they perform — nearly 15 helicopters disassembled, inspected and sent back out to the battlefield each month.

Not only do aircraft have to be repaired at the forward operating base, they must also be repaired or recovered should they have maintenance problems, or worse, crash outside of the wire. Recovery of downed aircraft is also the responsibility of

To accomplish this critical mission, TF Atlas relies on the skill and dedication of its downed aircraft recovery teams. The DARTs are comprised of Aviation mechanics and maintenance test pilots trained to repair and recover all airframes flown by the 82nd CAB. The DART mission is very challenging and often dangerous due to the terrain and hostile environments these aircraft operate in.

"When any of the brigade's aircraft go down or there is any type of [aircraft] incident, our job is to respond to the call with the necessary assets in order to recover the aircraft," said U.S. Army

Staff Sgt. Randall Broyles of Tampa, Fla., DART team NCO in charge with Task Force Atlas. "No matter what team is selected, they are ready to go at any moment."

The terrain in Regional Command-East is some of the most rugged and unforgiving in the world, covering the base of the Hindu Kush mountain range; a sub-range of the Himalayas. The highest peaks reach higher than 7,000 meters above sea level. In comparison, Mount Everest, the highest point in the world, stands 8,853 meters above sea level. That means DART teams face freezing temperatures, extreme altitudes, and challenges that can cripple both humans and aircraft.

To help even the odds, the team comes equipped with some of the most state-of-the-art recovery equipment available.

The team uses a variety of equipment such as specialized sling sets, air bag systems capable of lifting all Army aircraft, a mobile crane that is capable of lifting over 6,000 pounds, and various cutting tools including the "jaws of life." This equipment enables the team to recover aircraft in less than desirable terrain and is specially selected for every mission. It's all necessary to get in and

Combined Arms Center — Training

ORLANDO - An avatar of Col. Robert "Pat" White, deputy commander of the Combined Arms Center - Training, told an Army conference today that gaming will play a critical role in training.

White's avatar was part of a video that presented the colonel's pre-recorded comments at the Army Games for Training User Conference.

"I'm sorry I couldn't get to Orlando in person so I sent a 'Mini Me' to fill in," White said. "And I have to say, he looks pretty good." The video was created at the National Simulation Center.

White leads the Combined Arms Center - Training at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., which supports and develops training throughout the Army. The National Simulation Center, also at Fort Leavenworth, is part of CAC-T.

"One of my responsibilities is setting the future course for training in the

Col. Robert "Pat" White's avatar explains gaming's importance in Army training as part of a video shown at the Army Games for Training User Conference. White could not attend the Orlando, Fla., conference and addressed it through the video. He is the deputy commander of the Combined Arms Center - Training, Fort Leavenworth, Kan. Army," he said. "And as you all know, gaming has a significant role in that fu-

White said he knows from his experience as a battalion and brigade commander that gaming prepares Soldiers for live training and saves money.

"Every leader struggles with limited time, dollars and resources," he said. "Those same leaders know it's better to practice something first before you do it for real in live training. Live training is where our highest risk and greatest expense comes from."

White said gaming has demonstrated

- The Army rapidly adopts new technologies.
- Gaming technologies take situational and decision-making training to the individual Soldier.
- · Soldiers and leaders learn by completing scenarios multiple times.

Soldiers can access a wide array of training products at: https://milgaming. army.mil. The site contains programs to learn ethics, air assault tactics, defensive operations and other skills.

"Gaming already has changed the way the Army trains and educates - changed it for the better," White said.

Opelika-Auburn News

Star: 'I figured it was the right thing to do'

- three Army specialists, a medic and a linguist — he made his way toward the cut

Running into the open, with bullets and rounds coming from three different directions, they reached the isolated platoon of 20 U.S. and Afghan National Army Soldiers about 500 yards away. Their only protection was a clump of trees and a fast-moving stream between themselves and the Taliban. Here they set up a defensive position and began the first counterattack.

Using close-air support, they took out a mortar and RPG team, killing eight insurgents and driving them back onto the mountainside. Another Taliban squad maneuvered on their position and was repelled. Three more fighters were killed.

Torres initially wanted to pull his platoon back to the main element, but realized that by drawing so much Taliban fire they were acting as an effective decoy. Running back through the kill zone to reach his main element, he worked with his ANSF commander to organize the second counterattack, this time planning to cross the stream with a small force to surprise the enemy. Instead, they got pinned down out in the open.

Risking his life, Torres ordered his men to run back 100 meters to join some Afghan soldiers while he went in the opposite direction with only his M4 rifle to attack a Taliban machine gun nest. He was immediately hit by RPG fire and knocked down, though he says he has no recollection of it. Meanwhile, two ANA Soldiers were wounded. Torres ran to their aid and put himself in the direct line of enemy fire to protect them while they were dragged out of the kill zone. He then again ran to get medical supplies that saved the wounded soldiers' lives.

"Rounds literally whizzed by the head." Torres said. "We had so many close or near misses that I'm actually surprised that we walked out with the casualties that we did."

Aside from the two ANA Soldiers, only one U.S Soldier was seriously wounded in the battle.

Torres led the final counterattack that drove Taliban forces from a casualty collection point, eventually allowing a helicopter to land and medevac the wounded. When the dust settled, 45 insurgents had been killed in the operation, including a senior Taliban commander and two team leaders.

"We ended up chasing them all out the valley," Torres said. "[The battle] was the turning tide."

The Taliban have since tried to re-seed themselves back into the community, he says, but have so far been unsuccessful.

"Our hope was that if the village elders saw a large commitment from coalition forces it would encourage the fence sitters to stand up to the Taliban," Torres said. "Evidently, it worked.'

After receiving the Silver Star, Torres was asked why he would risk his own life, even after his platoon sergeant at one point begged him to stay behind. He replied, "I'd he said.

been in combat actions before. Most of my guys hadn't. I figured it was the right thing

Torres, a 13-year Army veteran who has deployed to Iraq and Afghanistan twice, admits that combat has become ingrained in his DNA to the point where it feels completely natural to him.

"It's kind of like I'm in the moment," he says. "For many people it's chaotic, but for me it makes sense. I'm able to focus."

His executive officer, U.S. Army 1st Lt. Mark Mayor, of Kenosha, Wis., agrees.

"His leadership is very direct, very clear," Mayor said. "He doesn't freak out under

Torres' deployment ends in April, and he will move on to his next assignment in January. But no matter what happens for the rest of his Army career, Sept. 21, 2011, will he a day he'll never forget "That day for us that were on the ground, it will be burned in our memory forever,"

Aircraft: 'You never know what you're going to be faced with'

get out fast.

"There are nearly a hundred ways to recover an aircraft," said U.S. Army Staff Sgt. Travis Stills of Pendleton, Ore., and one of the DART teams leading and knowledgeable NCOs. "No matter how many pictures you see or how many preliminary reports you may receive, you can only make that decision when you and your team make it to the site."

Trying to use all that equipment on a dusty, rocky mountainside to move mangled wreckage is a challenge hard to replicate in training. The equipment doesn't want to work right, twisted wreckage becomes difficult to free, and tension runs high. Creativity is key to using the equipment effectively and evacuating the wreckage safely.

"You never know what you're going to be faced with," said 1st Lt. Marshall Titch, the DART team officer in-charge. "You've gotta get out there, look at what you're facing, look at the tools and people you have available, and find a way to make it all work. It's not easy, and it takes some 'out of the box' thinking."

Titch found out he was going to be the DART OIC prior to deployment and immersed himself in aircraft manuals, studying for all types of situations he and his team could face.

"It's my job to develop the situation and maintain a thorough knowledge of my team's capabilities, said Titch, of Maxton, N.C. "In doing so, when the time comes to embark on a mission, I can confidently say I've assembled the right team of the exact number, of the most-qualified experts who possess the most applicable knowledge and experience for that particular scenario."

The DART team has been called upon to recover aircraft on the battlefield twice since 82nd CAB has been deployed, and twice in the states prior to deployment.

The first mission in Afghanistan proved to be fairly straightforward for the team. They were able to make quick repairs, enabling crew to fly the aircraft back to base, setting a record recovery time of nine

The second time the team was called out however, the situation wasn't as simple. An aircraft had crashed in Paktika province at an elevation of 9.000 feet. Extremely cold temperatures, rough terrain, deep snow, and incredibly high elevation all became major planning considerations. They quickly began to formulate a plan based on worst-case scenarios.

"Planning for this mission was difficult because the initial reports were vague," said Titch. "In addition, normally, recovery of a downed aircraft will fit into some category, such as damaged rotor head, no tail boom, or rolled over on the side but still intact, but this situation did not fall into any of those categories and was unlike anything we've ever recovered be-

The next morning TF Atlas launched their DART team and began a two-day recovery mission.

"It was a mess," Las Vegas, Nev., native, Spc. Ivan Martinez recalls. "The snow and altitude made our two extracting methods a little more difficult to accomplish. You don't realize how difficult it can be to maneuver a diamond plated chop saw, when you're fighting the clock and the weather."

In knee-deep snow and temperatures barely above zero, the team performed their assessments and disassembled the aircraft until it could be slung beneath a CH-47 Chinook.

"It is impossible to train and prepare Soldiers to deploy to an oxygen-limited altitude of 9,000 feet in below-freezing temperatures and waist-deep snow with the expectation that he or she will perform at their best," said Titch. "Despite the conditions, the efforts every single Soldier put forth far exceeded all expectations; resulting in a flawless recovery. Not one Soldier complained, moaned, or groaned while they were dragging the tail boom and aft pylon uphill or rolling fast packs full of aircraft parts onto Chinook after Chinook. Their mental and physical strength, endurance, and dedication to the mission led the way; all the way!"

"It was more than exciting getting away from aircraft maintenance and being able to be a part of what I knew would be a great team" says Martinez. "We all worked together really well and made sure we monitored each other for weather injuries, which were probably the most dangerous

Once the mission was over and the equipment was put away, the team went into work mode again to prepare for the next mission using the lessons they learned.

"The most crucial lesson we learned on this DART was the importance of bridging the gap between ground and air assets by handing over control to a single representative," said Titch.

The current TF Atlas DART, to date, has completed four DART missions since it was formed and is scheduled to redeploy to Fort Bragg in the fall.

Nationally recognized month seeks to raise awareness

By Angela Williams Army Flier Staff Writer

The Fort Rucker Family Advocacy Program offers services throughout the year, but April is an especially notable month because it's Child Abuse Prevention Month.

"A lot of people know about child abuse, but we try to highlight prevention in April," said Twanna Johnson, FAP training the month, FAP will have disspecialist.

"To accomplish this mission, FAP will provide a variety of specialized workshops, information booths and activities that are aimed at strengthening and supporting parents, children and Families," added Luticia Trimble-Smith, FAP manager.

This month, some of the events include baby massage classes, baby first aid training, a baby sign language class, a Family fun run and a series of classes on effective discipline. The Exceptional Family Member Program also offers a workshop about building healthy marriages for the Families of special needs children.

'Children with special needs or disabilities are more at risk than the general population for child abuse," explained Marion Cornish, EFMP manager. "Families with a special needs child face a lot of challenges and may have few resources, which can lead to frustration and stress. This frustration and stress may result in child abuse."

At various times throughout plays and information tables at the Center Library, post exchange and Soldier Service Center, said Johnson, but the most anticipated event is the Pinwheels for Prevention Family Fun Run/Walk April 14.

"This is for Families to do together. This is about prevention. Families who play together stay together," she said. "We try to give Families activities they can take with them beyond April."

The event is free but participants are asked to pre-register at the child, youth and school services parent central services, the child development center, the youth center or either of the physical fitness facilities. Tshirts are $5.75 and can be or-

Keep security in mind while on vacation

By Angela Williams Army Flier Staff Writer

Spring break season is here and the time for summer vacations is quickly approaching. Many Soldiers and Family members will invest hours into planning trips, but many also forget about plans to keep homes and vehicles safe while they travel.

'It's all about perspective," said Maj. Jay Massey, emergency management operations officer at the Fort Rucker Installation Operations Center, "Criminals look for indicators such as full mailboxes and lawns that are six inches high. These indicators reveal empty or unattended homes."

Massey encourages Families to look at their home from a criminal's perspective before they go out of town. "Find out where your vulnerabilities are and fix them," he said.

Some of the steps he recommends include having someone pick up mail and newspapers, using a timer for indoor and outdoor lights, having the grass cut, leaving a vehicle in the driveway, leaving porch lights on, and asking someone to take out the garbage cans and return them to their usual location after pick-up.

Essentially, "make your house look occupied," he said.

At times, Families have posted notes about vacation plans on their front door explaining where they were and when they would be back, Massey said. Other people may be quick to update a voicemail greeting or post travel plans on facebook

"That's what we want to avoid," he said. "Don't be a 'soft target."

Here on Fort Rucker, Soldiers and Families are offered an extra level of protection if they request it, according to Marc Mc-Dougald, deputy director of public safety.

DPS offers police checks for the quarters of people who live on post while they are on vacation, leave, TDY or otherwise out of town. To have the Fort Rucker police check on a residence, the occupants need to complete a request form at the Police Desk in Bldg. 5001, McDougald said.

The form includes information like the dates of the trip and emergency contact information. It also asks about any other person who may be at the residence to do things like water plants, feed pets or get the mail

All of these are steps Families can take before they leave, but there are also ways to keep belongings safe while traveling, Massey said.

He recommends parking in illuminated areas of parking lots, removing keys from vehicles and keeping valuable items hidden – especially while shopping. He also advises people to protect information such as credit cards, ATM numbers and how much cash they are carrying.

At the airport, Massey recommends staying alert and keeping a close watch on luggage and expensive items like cameras and laptops. Hotel guests should keep doors and windows locked, learn the location of fire exits and keep valuables in the hotel room safe, if available.

From an operations security perspective, Massev said military personnel should refrain from using military duffle bags or bags with government patches while traveling, and they should avoid using ranks and titles when making reservations.

"We're not saying there's a high rate of criminal activity here on post or off post. These are things that are often forgotten about or neglected before people leave," he said. "We just want to make sure no one becomes a soft target when they go out of

BIRMINGHAM — Taking a cue from the old Six Million Dollar Man television show, the IZOD IndyCar Series is unveiling a new car this year that is better. stronger and definitely faster.

With a sleeker body design and the introduction of additional engine suppliers, the new cars are expected to break track records when they arrive at Barber Motorsports Park outside of Birmingham for the running of the Honda Indy Grand Prix of Alabama presented by Legacy, to be held Friday-Sunday

"Iexpect you'll see significantly faster lap times here at Barber,' four-time IndyCar champion Dario Franchitti said. "It's lighter weight, more downforce, the engines are producing more power. I definitely expect it to be faster on the road courses.'

Will Power, the winner of the 2011 Honda Indy Grand Prix of Alabama, agreed.

"No question it's going to be faster than last year's car," Power said. "The engine is probably going to have more power, and the car is larger. So it has more downforce, more grip.

The new car will both look and sound different from the old one. The rear wheels are now nearly enclosed -- a safety feature that will also provide more stability and enable the cars to go faster through the turns.

In addition, Chevy and Lotus supplier Honda in producing the new VT6 turbo-charged motors, which will generate a lower sound than the high-pitched whine normally associated with Indy cars.

"It's going to make a better noise," Franchitti said.

Another change that fans won't have joined longtime engine notice, except in terms of faster Rahal, son of 1986 Indianapolis speeds, is the switch to a carbon fiber braking system similar to incredible the way it stops. I think what is used in Formula 1. The it has a lot of potential.' new system, which will allow for quicker entry into the corners, has been met with rave reviews from the drivers.

> "The brakes on this car are phenomenal," said Graham a better brand of racing for the 500 winner Bobby Rahal. "It's

The drivers admit there will be a learning period early this season as they become accustomed to all the changes. But the consensus is that the new car will produce

"The biggest thing is we'd had a car for about eight years that we understood and knew everything about," Scott Dixon said. "Once you get something new it requires a lot of work to try to get it exactly where you want it. But by all means, given a little time, we can make the car do what we want. It's exciting for all of us, and I think it will be exciting for the fans."

There also is a new look in the Grand Am Rolex Series, which will be at Barber Motorsports Park Saturday for the running of the Porsche 250. Chevrolet has introduced a 2012 Corvette Prototype that looks a lot like the famous Corvette street car.

"The design of this race car incorporates iconic Corvette styling cues and will be immediately recognized by sports car enthusiasts," Chevrolet vice president Jim Campbell said. "This has the potential to change the face of sports car racing."

The Honda Indy Grand Prix of Alabama presented by Legacy features six races and many more activities and attractions Friday-Sunday at Barber Motorsports Park. Tickets start at $15 and children 12 and younger are admitted free with a ticketed adult. Rucker Lanes offers leagues of Family fun

MARCH 29, 2012

By Nathan Pfau Army Flier Staff Writer

Avid bowlers can suit up and get their bowling shoes ready for some friendly competition as the Rucker Lanes bowling center's spring intramural season begins Tuesday, while everyone else can enjoy food and fun and more that the bowling center has to offer.

Rucker Lanes is taking active signups up until the night of the games at the front counter of the bowling center, according to Ron Cook, Fort Rucker Bowling Center manager.

The games will be held on Tuesdays from 6:30-8:30 p.m. for 10 weeks, and are open to all active duty military, reservists, retired military, Family members, and Department of Defense civilians and contract employees, said the manager. All Family members must be at least 19 years of age to compete in the intramural league, he added.

The cost to join the intramural league is a one-time $10 fee and $1.75 a week for shoe rentals, according to Cook.

"We do a full banquet at the end of each season," he said. "[The fee] basically covers the cost of the banquet. The only other cost that [people] are going to incur is the shoe rental, which, if people would like to buy their own, we also sell [at the bowling center]."

The teams must be in groups of four people, but people do not have to sign up for the league as a team if they do not have the full team already, said Cook.

"We encourage singles to come [and sign up] because we'll have couples that come in that want to bowl, and we'll pair them up with other couples or singles and match them with others," he said.

The bowling center also offers a youth league for those that aren't old enough to compete in the intramural season.

"We've grown out our bowling program a lot and worked to try and create some of the new youth programs here including the youth league here on Saturday mornings," said Cook.

Beginning April 7, the bowling center will start the 10-week long Rucker Lanes Youth Bowling League on Saturdays at 9:30 a.m., which includes three games of bowling, shoe rental, a youth bowling jersey, United States Bowling Congress membership, trophies and awards and an end of season XTREME party, according to Cook.

The cost of new registration for the youth league is $59.50 per child for ages 7-19, and $48 per child for ages 7 and under. For children with returning registration, the cost is $12.50 per child and $10 per child, respectively, he we're constantly working on improving things," he said. "We have a very good snack bar and a lot of pizza for the first time and that's become rather popular."

Rucker Lanes also hosts Extreme Bowling every Saturday night from 8 p.m. to midnight, which is open to the general public, said Cook.

"Extreme bowling is a crazy, party atmosphere," he said. "We crank the music up, turn the lights tions, however, and offers much out and just try to have fun with bowling all around."

The cost for Extreme Bowling is $10 per person and covers all "We have a lot going on and games played and includes shoe rental.

The bowling center also offers more fun for the general public lunch specials. We just rolled out to enjoy, with year round bowling at a good price, according to the manager.

"Mondays through Fridays it costs $1 per person, per game and their shoe rentals are always $1.75," he said. "After 5 p.m. and on weekends, it's $2.25 per person, per game.

also hosts Quarter Mania, which starts at 5 p.m. and the games costs 25 cents and shoe rentals cost 50 cents, said Cook, adding that they offer $1 hotdogs during that time.

"We're just visiting from Ohio and it's our second time here [at Rucker Lanes]," said Mike Gullifer while bowling with his Family at the bowling center. "It's just good Family time.'

The bowling center's hours of operation are: Mondays-Thursdays from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m., Fridays and Saturdays from 9 a.m. to midnight and Sundays from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m.

FOOTBALL PICK WINNERS

Congratulations to Kent Anger (right) and Michael Simmons (above) for winning the college and professional football picks in 2011. Anger smoked the competition for the third straight year in the college picks while Simmons won his first title picking NFL games. Asked for comments, Anger, a big The Ohio State University Buckeye fan, said "in the middle of SEC (Southeast Conference) country, it's nice to see a Big 10 guy dominate," while Simmons preferred to let the Terrible Towel of his beloved Pittsburgh Steelers do the talking. Congratulations again, champs! People interested in taking part in the 2012 college or NFL picks competition should call Jim Hughes at 255-1239.

Soldiers qualify Team USA for Olympics

By Tim Hipps IMCOM Public Affairs

KISSIMMEE, Fla. (March 26, 2012) -- Two U.S. Army World Class Athlete Program wrestlers over the weekend qualified their Greco-Roman weight classes for Team USA to compete in the 2012 Olympic

Sgt. 1st Class Dremiel Byers and Sgt. Spenser Mango accomplished their mission by reaching the finals at the FILA Pan American Olympic Games Qualifying Tournament March 23-25, at Silver Spurs Arena.

The tournament featured wrestlers from 17 nations who had not qualified for the 2012 Olympics. The top two finishers in each weight class qualified their country for the London Olympic Games in August.

Byers sweeps gold

Bvers, 37, a 2008 Olympian from Kings Mountain, N.C., won the 120-kilogram/264.5-pound division with three consecutive victories without allowing his opponents to score a point.

"I came out and just did what I had to do," said Byers, who noted that he felt "sluggish" throughout his matches. "[I] didn't try anything fancy; just stuck to the basics and got it done. That's all that matters.'

Byers defeated Canada's Sunny Dhinsa, 1-0, 3-0, and Dominican Republic's Ramon Garcia, 2-0, 1-0, before sweeping Venezuela's Andres Ayub, 2-0, 2-0, for the gold

"You're always pushing for the perfect performance that you're probably never going to have, but taking into consideration the pressure on this tournament, this is just tactics and getting the job done,'

"It might not be pretty, but qualify the weight class for the Olympic Games. That's big pressure, so I'm just proud that Byers and Mango both got it done," said WCAP wrestling coach Shon Lewis.

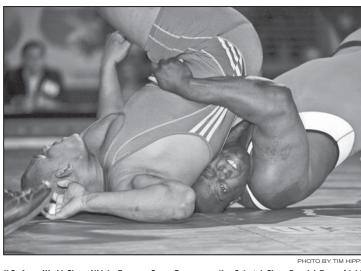

Mango takes silver

Mango, 25, a 2008 Olympian from St. Louis, Mo., took the silver medal at 55 kilos/121 pounds. He defeated Ecuador's Mayea Figueroa, 5-0, 1-0, and Colombia's Andres Taborda, 1-0, 1-0, before losing to Javier Gonzalez of Cuba in his final match of the round-robin format.

"That guy is a true talent; he's gifted," Byers said. "He might not have won, but he still got it done, and that's all we came here to

"He wrestled OK," Lewis added.

Our patients say it best...

"I rely on my legs to make my living hiking, crawling, and walking in some of the most rugged and remote places on the planet. When wear and tear and injuries left me in need of knee replacement surgery I did a lot of research and one group stood out. I traveled from northern Illinois and I feel you can't beat the service and care I've received. If you're looking for the right doctors who will take care of you the right way....Southern Bone & Joint Specialists is where you want to go! " Ralph Cianciarulo
