Fort Rucker honors nation's veterans, their families during ceremony

Fort Rucker honored the nation's veterans, both past and present, at its Veterans Day ceremony Nov. 10 in the U.S. Army Aviation Museum.

Maj. Gen. Michael C. McCurry, U.S. Army Aviation Center of Excellence and Fort Rucker commanding general, spoke at the ceremony and thanked attending visiting veterans and Wiregrass community leaders.

"We're thankful for our long-standing mutual service ...

AAFES hosts grand opening Dec. 1 after 2 years of renovations

The Army & Air Force Exchange Service will host a grand reopening Dec. 1 at its Fort Rucker main store to celebrate what "looks like a brand-new store," after more than two years of renovations, according to the facility's manager. AAFES and post officials will cut the ribbon at 11 a.m. and then host games, drawings and other activities throughout the day, according to Brenda Hyland, AAFES general manager for Maxwell, Gunter and Fort Rucker.

TAP helps separating Soldiers land successfully in civilian world

The award-winning Fort Rucker Transition Assistance Program helps Soldiers to land successfully in the civilian world after leaving the Army, but starting early is key to that success.

"We are the first stop for Soldiers preparing to transition out of the Army," said Alfred W. Alexander, the TAP transition services manager.

He advised that contacting the TAP office one year ...

Fort Rucker museum offers portal into Army Aviation history

More than 100,000 people visit the U.S. Army Aviation Museum each year to get a glimpse into the history of Army Aviation and learn from its past. But as much as patrons are able to see what the history of Army Aviation holds, there is much more than currently meets the eye when it comes to the museum’s vast collection. “Currently, in the existing museum, we are limited by space, so we primarily display what was actually in the Army’s operational inventory,” said Bob Mitchell, U.S. Army ...
