Engineers validate berm work rates

2nd Lt. Jordan Kelley,
10th BEB, 1ABCT UPAR

Soldiers from Company A, 10th Brigade Engineer Battalion, 1st Armored Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division conducted a platoon dig exercise, July 22, on Fort Stewart.

This training began the validation process for dig capabilities for the platoon in support of 1ABCT maneuver elements for upcoming training and deployments. The platoon validated anti-tank ditch, vehicle fighting position, and protective berm work rates. This provided the maneuver commanders a better sense of how fast and efficiently they can emplace obstacles and fighting positions to assist in the commander's battlefield shaping plans.

"The intent of this training is to ensure the horizontal construction squad within the engineer support platoon is capable of supporting maneuver elements on the battle field," said Capt. Vito Angrisano, Company A commander. "Their ability to complete survivability and counter mobility missions is crucial for the success of the Brigade."

According to members of the operator squad, the training identified problems with tactical night operations. Better methods to increase operator visibility at night, including better blacking out of cabin lights for use of night vision devices would greatly improve the quality of the training and the mission success.

The unit successfully assessed the platoons current work rates on their D7 dozer. As engineers the unit has to communicate to commanders exactly which obstacles and fighting positions they can build, based on realistic dig work rates, proving they have an adequate allotted of time to plan accordingly.

The platoon goes out to the field almost monthly to ensure continued progress for all of its horizontal construction operators, and to maintain readiness for upcoming training this fall.

There are to engineer support platoons in the entire brigade. The platoon will be out on the battlefield supporting the maneuver battalions this October and November during Marne Focus and preparing for the future operations.

Col. Alric Francis assumed command of the 3rd Infantry Division Artillery from Col. Robert Marshall during a change of command ceremony at Cottrell Field on Fort Stewart, July 25.

Francis, a former Marne Soldier, replaced Marshall for the second time in his Army career. It was truly his and his Family's great pleasure to return to the 3rd ID, he said.

"Being back on this very field where I returned from numerous deployments is both haunting and, yet, exciting," Francis said. "It fills me with a sense of pride and is a constant reminder of the cost of our profession as we are bordered by Warriors Walk."

Maj. Gen. Antonio Aguto Jr., commander of 3rd ID, said he was honored to serve alongside the new incoming DIVARTY commander.

Francis comes to 3rd ID having most recently served as a director for defense policy and strategy as a member of the National Security Council in the Executive Office of the President at the White House.

"I think I can safely say that he's happy to be out of (Washington), D.C. traffic and amongst Dogface Soldiers once again," Aguto said. "To you and your Family, welcome back to Marne Division; we are extremely excited to have you here."

Marshall said he takes solace in knowing DIVARTY is in good hands. He praised Francis as an expert fires supporter and a gifted artillery.

"He will guide the division to a new highest proficiency in the delivery of fire," Marshall said. "I can think of no better command team to hold the ranks of DIVARTY."

Marshall moves on to U.S. Army Training and Army Doctrine Command to be the director of training operations management activity in Fort Eustis, Virginia.

Aguto said the division would be indebted to Marshall for his leadership and devotion to his Soldiers and his Family.

"(Marshall), thank you for everything you've done to make this brigade, these leaders and these Soldiers be the best," Aguto said.

It's hurricane season: be prepared, not scared

Pat Young
Fort Stewart Public Affairs
Commentary

September is National Preparedness Month. This year's theme is Prepared, notscared. Be ready for disaster.

Community members are encouraged to be prepared, have a plan and save some money – just in case. And to help Families get involved by educating their children.

While the Fort Stewart website has a good deal of preparedness information available on the website at <https://home.army.mil/stewart>, I want to contribute by sharing some insight from two significant hurricanes I experienced first-hand, as a youth and later as an adult.

In August 1969, when I was four years-old, living with my grandparents, Hurricane Camille made landfall on the shores of my home town in Bay St. Louis, Mississippi. My family had evacuated to a nearby location, which allowed us to return quickly. While we learned our house survived, it was damaged. Tree limbs had fallen on the roof and flood waters covered the floors. During our assessment, my grandmother discovered a snake in the living room. While grandfather dealt with it, the children were ushered outside - into a world of adventure.

If we had a long-haired dog named Lassie, it would have started barking a warning to adults - the children were up to mischief. (For the younger generation, you may have to Google Lassie.)

The devastation was incredible and the area seemed surreal. Many of the roads and structures had been swept away. The waters from the Gulf of Mexico had laid waste to the coastal houses and left a plethora of debris. Large rocks were waiting to be thrown back into the ocean. Suffice to say, I managed to land a rather large one on my brother's head – requiring a hasty retreat, about 20 stitches and years to apologize. Our adventure had strained the over-taxed hospital and my grandparent's nerves.

Many years and hurricanes later, I understand the danger doesn't end with the storm. The lack of power, disease, debris and limited resources all pose great challenges.

Over the years, I've tried to pass my lesson on to others. I often warn people to take hurricanes seriously, evacuate where you can and avoid returning too soon.

Prior to Hurricane Katrina in August 2005, while helping maintain a shelter for the City of Gulfport, Mississippi, nearly 300 people checked in, and learned that lesson too.

Many showed up without food, clothing, medicines, money or their important papers. The shelter only had about nine cases of water and meals ready-to-eat. Most of the people expected to weather the storm and leave the next day. But many roads were destroyed and the area wasn't safe. They had to stay until access to the area was opened up. Even after people were allowed to leave, resources were limited.

After a few days, help started arriving with support from the American Red Cross, the National Guard, FEMA, volunteers from churches and private organizations, emergency responders from neighboring states, and Soldier from the 3rd Infantry Division.

You can help your Family by learning more about severe weather - Be Prepared, not scared. Be prepared for disaster.

A good source for severe weather preparedness is the Fort Stewart-Hunter Army Airfield website, <https://home.army.mil/stewart>. Search for either the hurricane center or the Severe Weather Handbook.

And remember, it's better to evacuate and return when it is safe, rather than exposing your Family to an unnecessary adventure.

An AH-64 Apache flexes its capabilities as it sends rounds down range during 3-17 Cav., 3rd ID aerial gunnery live-fire on Fort Stewart, July 25. Training across a variety of tasks ensures Marne Air Soldiers sustain readiness.

Marne Air performs live fire training

Pfc. Savannah Roy
3rd CAB Public Affairs

Marne Air Soldiers from 3rd Squadron, 17th Cavalry Regiment, 3rd Combat Aviation Brigade honed their gunnery skills on the AH-64 Apache helicopter during a live-fire training and qualification, July 22-Aug. 16 on Fort Stewart.

Gunnery, the pilot's equivalent of weapons qualification, serves as one of the cornerstones of an Apache crew's training.

"AH-64 Apache pilots need to be proficient in their weapon systems in order to protect the aircraft and troops on the ground," said Maj. Beau Robinson, an aviation officer with 3-17 Cav., 3rd CAB, 3rd ID. "Overall, the training is going well and everyone who has shot has successfully qualified."

ified crews to conduct mission essential tasks."

The aerial gunnery live-fire was conducted to run all AH-64 Apache pilots through realistic scenarios that require attention to detail. To maintain readiness and lethality, gunnery requires the pilots to successfully engage targets during both day and night. After the gunnery table is completed, pilots get evaluated by the master gunner on their performance at the range.

"This training is beneficial to all AH-64 Apache pilots, especially our new pilots," said 1st Lt. Matthew Manning, an aviation officer with 3-17 Cav., 3rd CAB, 3rd ID. "Overall, the training is going well and everyone who has shot has successfully qualified."

Department of Defense Education Activity educators and staff held an energized back-to-school rally for teachers at Kessler Elementary School, July 29, on Fort Stewart.

Fort Stewart-Hunter Army Airfield Garrison Commander, Col. Bryan Logan, the 3rd Infantry Division rock band, color guard and ascot, Rocky, joined educators from Diamond, Murray and Kessler elementary to celebrate the upcoming school year.

The band opened the event with lively music, which stoked the room's energy and enthusiasm, with songs including Born to be Wild, Walking on Sunshine and Beat it, among others.

Amidst the music Logan and Rocky took the stage to say thanks to returning teachers, and good luck to new DoDEA staff members.

"You are the front-line in the war against ignorance," Logan said. Adding, without teachers, there would be no doctors, lawyers and other professionals. He said a good education opens the gateway for people to pursue their dreams.

He encouraged educators to continue their quest for excellence; to challenge themselves and never stop pushing others to learn; and to face each day with a smile.

DoDEA's South Carolina/Fort Stewart community

superintendent, Kathleen Reiss, was also on-hand to congratulate the district for an outstanding previous year and to wish the educators and staff, another great year.

"I'm very excited to see the start of a new school year," Reiss said before the event kicked off. "I always look forward to everyone coming back from the break."

She said last year, district schools exceeded many national standards including the AdvancED Index of Education Quality, with the national average being around 280 and the local district rating 355.

Reiss applauded the efforts of students and educators, specifically in the sixth, seventh and eighth grades and Algebra classes, whose score ranged between six and eight points higher than the national average.

She said the 2018 progress was excellent and looked forward to educators building on to those advancements.

Reiss also noted she only had the opportunity to see the start of the school year, noting she planned on retiring in August. She said in her 44 years of service, she has never missed a school-opening.

Reiss said she appreciated the support of the parents and hoped they would continue to be involved with their children's learning and volunteering at the schools.

UPARs trained, set to tell Army's stories

Staff Sgt. Brian K. Ragin Jr.
3rd ID Public Affairs

Nearly 60 Dogface Soldiers from across the 3rd Infantry Division and tenant units attended a three-day crash course to learn about becoming a unit public affairs representative at the Paul R. Smith Education Center on Fort Stewart, July 24-26.

The training covered the roles and expectations of being a UPAR and was taught by the public affairs professionals from across the division.

Public affairs in the Army is a combination of public relations, photography, video, print journalism, with heavy emphasis on social media and its platforms like Facebook, Twitter and Instagram. Public affairs is how the Army shows past, present, future recruits and the public what it is they do.

Individual military units like platoons, companies and battalions, with the help of their UPAR, are able to cover their own events and ensure that achievements and awards are effectively conveyed to the public.

"We, as mass communication specialist, have a duty to tell our units story, keep the American public informed, and to highlight our mission at ever echelon," said Master Sgt. Shelia L. Cooper, 3rd ID Public Affairs senior enlisted advisor. "Units below brigade level do not have actual mass communications specialist, so UPARs are the best way for us, at company and battalion level to show case our mission and efforts to both internal and external audiences. UPARs are essential to helping us tell their stories."

During the three-day event the attendees received training in PA fundamentals, Security Accuracy Policy Propriety, Associated Press writing style, writing cut lines, taking well composed photos, news writing, mobile phone video techniques and Social Media. Also, they were provided additional resources and contacts to help them provide coverage of their respective units.

Cooper added that now that these newly appointed UPARs are equipped with the knowledge to exceed in news writing, photography, and social media, they have the knowledge to limit operational security violations and keep the public informed on our mission and efforts as the U.S. Army.

"Each unit has an important mission," said Patrick Young, the Frontline newspaper editor. "UPARs help tell the Army story from the unit perspective."

Young noted individuals who are interested in becoming UPARS and contributing content to the Frontline, can contact their brigade public affairs officers or for non-3rd ID units, to frontlineeditor@gmail.com, for consideration.

Winn audiologist supports 48th IBCT's redeployment with hearing readiness

Zach Rehnstrom
Winn ACH Public Affairs

Almost eight months ago, the 48th Infantry Brigade Combat Team, a modular infantry brigade with the Georgia National Guard, participated in hearing readiness training with the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity- Fort Stewart, Army Hearing Program.

"Hearing is critical to a Soldier's job and mission success," said Capt. Marisa Ragonesi, MEDDAC audiologist and chief of the Army Hearing Program. "Hearing is 24/7, 360 degrees. It allows a Soldier to shoot, move, and communicate, which are the fundamental skills for a Soldier to obtain their mission readiness."

With mission readiness being the critical objective, Ragonesi and her team conduct post-deployment hearing tests to assess each Soldier's hearing accurately.

"We need to test these Soldiers to gauge what hearing readiness classification they fall under and whether they are fit for duty," Ragonesi said.

Besides screening each Soldier primarily for mission readiness, Ragonesi and her team also take hearing damage and hearing loss seriously and advocate for the importance of these post-deployment tests for each Soldier.

"Hearing loss is one of those injuries where you don't know what you have until it's gone," Ragonesi said. "Once it's gone, then these Soldiers are dealing with the repercussions of not being able to understand their children, their wives, their Families. They're not able to enjoy what they have in the past."

For the Soldiers diagnosed with a significant hearing impediment, Ragonesi and her team provide an array of auditory technology, such as the Tactical Communication Protective System, that can assist, improve and balance a Soldier's hearing. Soldiers like Staff Sgt. Marcel Nalls with the 48th IBCT, who after many tours of duty began to notice a degradation in his hearing.

"Those who have been deployed multiple times, had multiple situations, a lot of years in the military hearing starts to decrease," Nalls said. "That system allowed us to hear a lot better, a lot further, a lot clearer, and also allowed us to communicate with each other even in low tones, and we could hear it crystal clear."

Capt. Daniel Adcock is another success story with the Army hearing program. Adcock, a field artillery officer, has a hearing disease known as tinnitus, which is an increased, continues high pitched ringing in his left ear. Adcock was a part of the pre-deployment TCAPS training and was fit with the system for his deployment by the audiologist team at Winn Army Community Hospital.

"It just gives you increased clarity," Adcock said. "We're constantly dealing with numbers and everything like that. So, it is incredibly important for us to have that clarity of speech; it just kind of amplifies everything it's almost like having bionic hearing."

The ability to provide these Soldiers with hearing technology, meaningful training and counseling geared towards hearing loss prevention can ultimately increase the optimal readiness for these Soldiers.

"We're looking to educate Soldiers and remind them how important wearing hearing protection is," Ragonesi said. "Protecting their hearing for when they need it most."

The Army Hearing program team continues daily to educate, advocate and implement hearing training that continues to build the Soldiers hearing readiness.

Army fields first armored BCT with high-capacity network systems

For the first time, the Army fielded its high-capacity Terrestrial Transmission Line Of Sight Radio, known as TRILOS, to a brigade combat team -- the 1st Armored Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division.

The Army fielded TRILOS and several other expeditionary network modernization systems and prototypes to provide the mobility, network connectivity and signal path diversity needed for an armor formation.

"Our unit is the most deployed armored brigade combat team in the 18th Airborne Corps; we need equipment that is more mobile...that is smaller, lighter and faster," said Col. Michael Adams, former commander of the 1ABCT, 3rd ID. Adams recently had a change of command with Col. Trent Upton and transitioned to the 3rd ID chief of staff.

"I need to get our network equipment to the fight as fast as possible, and once deployed, I need the network up and running to get the information I need so I can make informed decisions faster than the enemy," he said.

Originally, the TRILOS radio was slated to be fielded to expeditionary signal battalions only, but in January 2019 the Army reprioritized the basis of issue to include brigade combat teams. Later this summer, the Army plans to field TRILOS to its first Army National Guard unit -- the Florida ARNG 146th ESB.

TRILOS will replace the much larger legacy at-the-halt high capacity line of sight radio, which is nearing end of life. The expeditionary transit case-based TRILOS radio sets up more quickly and delivers a 12-fold increase in bandwidth and six-fold increase in range.

"We can push TRILOS out to different units, and they just plug it into their [tactical network] Command Post Nodes and get that high bandwidth connectivity," said Capt. Brian Wright, network operations officer and acting S6 for the 1ABCT, 3rd ID. "At the end of the day, the TRILOS provides more capability and enhance es readiness. And since the enemy knows that we rely very heavily on satellite, with TRILOS our services can connect through the local area network without having to go over a satellite transportable terminal, which has lower bandwidth."

Pfc. Alyssa Hernandez, network system operator for 1ABCT, also noted the significance of TRILOS radio in providing signal path diversity in congested and contested environments.

"It's important for commanders to have redundant forms of communications -- beyond-line-of-sight and line-of-sight -- so they have choices, alternative ways to get the information they need when they need it," she said.

During the TRILOS new equipment training, Hernandez and the other-1ABCT Soldiers said that the system is also much easier and faster to set up, operate, and maintain.

They completed training in a week, versus the roughly 16 weeks of training needed for the more complex legacy HCLOS system.

Along with the TRILOS radio, the Army also fielded the 1ABCT with additional expeditionary communications equipment, including network extension packages that enable coalition interoperability; the small form factor modular communication node-advanced enclave for intelligence data sharing; and upgrades to the unit's Secure Wi-Fi and global broadcast service that increase capability and ease of operation.

Project Manager Tactical Network, assigned to the Program Executive Office for Command, Control, Communications-Tactical, provided the new equipment training and fielding for this agile network tool suite in May, on Fort Stewart. In September, the Army expects to begin fielding the unit with inflatable satellite terminals known as transportable tactical command communications, or T2C2.

The PM is also currently delivering "prototype" at-the-halt tactical network equipment to the 1ABCT that will support two developmental operations efforts that the unit will pilot this summer.

Soldier feedback from the pilots will inform capability and basis of issue decisions, enabling the Army to field the right mix of equipment across the force. The first pilot will inform decisions for the 5th Generation Technical Insertion, the next equipment refresh for the Army's at-the-halt tactical network transport equipment.

This upgrade is expected to reduce setup time, make the systems easier to operate and maintain and provide more computing power in a smaller footprint. These benefits are derived from new commercial-of-the-shelf hardware, software and virtualization technologies. The new network equipment will be deployed in transit cases with tow handles and wheels, versus permanent shelter integration, increasing maneuverability and operational flexibility.

The 1ABCT will also pilot a new more agile and supportable version of the legacy at-the-halt satellite transportable terminal, or STT. To maximize efficiencies, this potential solution would repurpose the legacy STT metal frame. The prototype base-band equipment is transit case-based versus permanently integrated onto the terminal as it is on the legacy STT. This more expeditionary solution enables Soldiers to either operate the equipment outside on the STT or move the transit cases inside and operate it in the command post alongside the rest of the unit.

The 1ABCT will use its new expeditionary network equipment and prototypes during its training rotation at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, California, in early 2020. Following the rotation, the unit will provide additional feedback to inform continual system improvements and operation.

Adams said he believes the new gear will make his unit "more mobile and survivable."

"The sooner my commands can set up these network systems, get the information to me, and shut the systems back down, the better," Adams said. "The enemy may have located me with that [last] signal, so I need to be able to move as fast as possible."
