Chief of Staff of the Army: Initial message to the Army team

James C. McConville

General, U.S. Army

40th Chief of Staff

I am honored to serve as the 40th Chief of Staff of the Army. It is an incredible privilege to lead the world's premier fighting force, made up of the Nation's greatest men and women.

Our Army - Regular, National Guard and Reserve - is the best-trained, best-equipped, and best-led land force ever to take to the field. We stand shoulder-to-shoulder with the joint force, allies, and partners to protect our interests and uphold our shared values.

Our Army serves to defend the Nation. When we send the Army somewhere, we don't go to participate, we don't go to try hard, we go to win. Winning matters! We win by doing the right things, the right way.

People are always my 1 priority: Our Army's people are our greatest strength and our most important weapon system. Our people are our Soldiers, Family members, Department of the Army Civilians, and Soldiers for Life (retirees, and veterans). We must take care of our people and treat each other with dignity and respect. It is our people who will deliver on our readiness, modernization and reform efforts.

Readiness: Army leaders have a sacred obligation to build cohesive teams that are highly trained, disciplined, and fit that can win on any battlefield. Cohesive teams drive tactical to strategic readiness and enable dynamic force employment. We must be ready to defeat any adversary, anywhere, whenever called upon, under any condition.

Modernization: The 2018 National Defense Strategy directs the Army to shift focus from irregular warfare to great power competition. We are at a critical inflection point and we must aggressively pursue the Army's modernization efforts in order to maintain our competitive edge.

Modernization must include developing the multi-domain operations concept at echelon, delivering the six modernization priorities, and implementing a 21st Century talent management system.

Reform: We cannot be an Industrial Age Army in the Information Age. We must transform all linear industrial age processes to be more effective, protect our resources, and make better decisions. We must be the Army of tomorrow, today.

It is our duty to provide the Nation a professional, lethal, and decisive force that will win against any of our adversaries. Thank you and your Families for your service and sacrifice. I am proud to serve alongside this Nation's best.

People First - Winning Matters - Army Strong!

Hard lesson learned now guides priorities for 16th Sergeant Major of the Army

Sean Kimmons
Army News Service

FORT MEADE, Maryland -- The Soldiers were unaware of the rocket-propelled grenade until it was fired at their dismounted patrol in the Iraqi city of Baiji.

But the vision of it exploding behind then-1st Sgt. Michael Grinston after it whooshed four inches over his shoulder is forever etched into his mind.

It's a grim, daily reminder for Grinston, who was sworn in as the 16th sergeant major of the Army on Aug. 9, of a lesson learned -- a painful one that now drives much of his priorities to build a more combat-ready force.

"When you get ambushed, and Soldiers are dying right there in the street, it is not the time to figure out if everybody knows what they're doing," he said. "It was a pretty tough day."

At the age of 19, the longtime artilleryman first signed up as a cannon crew member on a two-year contract.

He eventually stretched it into a 31-year career as he served in every leadership position from team leader to senior enlisted leader for Army Forces Command before his current role.

"I just focused on being the best person I could be at that time, in that job, at that place," he said in a recent interview.

Grinston grew up in Jasper, a northwestern Alabama town with roughly 14,000 people and a 30-minute drive from Birmingham along Interstate 22.

Named after Sgt. William Jasper, an American Revolutionary War hero, the town became Grinston's home when his mother moved there when he was a toddler.

He attended the local schools and took courses at a nearby community college after high school. He then transferred to Mississippi State University.

While he liked to exercise and had friends already in the Army, his first tuition bill from the university and a random call from a recruiter finally convinced him to join.

"I grew up with a single mother and we didn't have a lot of money," Grinston said. "So, when the recruiter just happened to call me, we were trying to [figure out] how we were going to pay for that education."

The education benefits helped, but as Grinston, who later earned a bachelor's degree in business administration, spent more time in the service, he was drawn to other aspects of it.

"I joined the Army for the college money, but that's not really why I stayed," he said. "I stayed because I enjoy the people and being active."

His admiration for the Army's "King of Battle" also grew as the years went on. His eyes light up when he speaks about artillery and the opportunities it offered him.

Throughout his career, he has led Soldiers in various units from light infantry, mechanized to airborne. He earned badges for jumpmaster, air assault, drill sergeant and even completed Ranger School, a rare feat for artillerymen at the time.

"I love being in artillery," he said, laughing. "I never really wanted to change. I got an opportunity to do all these different things within that field."

Six months before Grinston's artillery unit deployed to Iraq, they found out instead of firing rounds they would serve as infantrymen.

His unit, part of 1st Infantry Division's 1st Battalion, 7th Field Artillery Regiment, had just trained on advanced artillery ranges. The Soldiers now had to train outside their normal roles.

The unit was sent to Hohenfels, Germany, for a crash course on infantry tactics. The largest live-fire exercises they could conduct, though, were only at the team level.

"I tried to get in as many live fires as I could to kind of replicate what it feels like on the ground," he said, "because I knew it was going to be hard."

Just three days into the process of replacing the outgoing unit in Iraq, his Soldiers had their first big test.

Grinston heard over the radio that one of his unit's vehicles had broken down in Baiji, a strategic city due to its oil refinery, the largest in the country.

He rushed out of Forward Operating Base Summerall with a platoon to provide security. But once they got there, the stalled convoy was under attack, leaving one Soldier severely wounded.

"That was our first platoon live fire," he said. "In the middle of the town, being shot at, and a Soldier loses a foot."

About a month later, on April 9, 2004, Grinston and others were on a patrol through the city. This time, it felt strangely quiet. The market was closed; the streets were deserted.

It was still early in the Iraq War, and the artillerymen were unsure what it all meant.

"It's as clear as day when I run it in my mind [now]," he said. "But at the time you're going from artillery and not noticing these things."

A report then came down that insurgents were preparing to ambush the mayor's office. Grinston joined a squad-sized dismounted patrol as they headed over to investigate.

"Unfortunately, we found it," he said of the ambush.

As the patrol turned into an alley, an insurgent in a building about 100 meters away aimed an RPG at them. The Soldiers had no idea what was about to happen.

"You can't see every window," Grinston said. "If you just stand in the city and somebody wanted to shoot you, could you stop them? It's damn near impossible."

The explosion instantly killed the squad leader and platoon sergeant: Staff Sgts. Raymond Jones and Toby Mallett, respectively. Spc. Peter Enos, a combat medic, would later die from his wounds. Two others were also wounded.

Grinston walked away unscathed.

"Every day I think about that. It's what makes me wake up in the morning," he said. "When you go through something like that, it's life-changing."

Amid the chaos, Grinston and others transported the wounded and dead back to the base. There, he refitted and returned to the city with M1 Abrams tanks and Bradley Fighting Vehicles to confront the insurgents.

After hours of firefights and RPG attacks, quiet was restored to the city.

For his efforts, Grinston earned a Bronze Star with Valor device -- the first of two he would earn in his career.

The most difficult thing he has ever had to do in his life, though, did not occur against an enemy. It was calling the family members of those who would not come home.

The squad leader, he said, had to deploy late so he could watch the birth of his son. It was the first and last time he would see his son in person.

"You can't forget it, when you call that family and you have to explain that you didn't protect their husband," Grinston said, choking up. "If that's not enough motivation, then I don't know what is."

The fatal RPG attack, and many other combat situations he faced, continue to drive him to ensure the next Soldier is ready for them.

As the top enlisted leader in the Army, one of his priorities will be for Soldiers to master the fundamentals -- the basic individual combat tasks and skills they should all know.

"I truly believe we have to be experts as Soldiers, no matter what your [military occupational specialty] is," he said.

He will also concentrate on building more effective squads as well as taking care of Soldiers and their families.

"As a sergeant major, you're always focused in on people and people matter," he said.

As for the fundamentals, Grinston was an early proponent for the Expert Soldier Badge, which the Army recently approved.

Similar to the Expert Infantryman Badge and Expert Field Medical Badge, the new badge will test Soldiers from other MOSs on combat skills as an incentive to build readiness across the force.

During a firefight, an infantryman with an M240B machine gun, for instance, may go down and a Soldier from a non-combat arms job would then need to step up.

"You're going to feel more confident that if there's something that could happen, you know how to operate an M240," he said. "That's what it means to be an expert."

While at FORSCOM, Grinston played a key role in the development of training and preparing combat units to deploy around the world.

Former Sgt. Maj. of the Army Daniel Dailey, who had served in the position since January 2015, said the Army picked the right person to succeed him.

"He possesses all of the character and leadership qualities necessary to lead our NCO Corps into the future," he said, "and he will continue to serve the best interests of our Soldiers, their families and the Army."

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Mark A. Milley called Grinston a "world-class leader" who has deployed three times to Iraq and twice to Afghanistan as well as Desert Storm and Kosovo.

Fort Stewart artillery Soldiers continue to maintain lethality

By Sgt. Daniel Guerrero
1ABCT Public Affairs

Soldiers from Battery C, 1st Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, 1st Armored Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division, conducted their section level, live fire qualification at Fort Stewart, Aug 1.

This live fire exercise is designed to train and certify individual sections so they can maintain proficiency in their crews and equipment. Artillery sections consist of teams of five to eight Soldiers. These teams are required to conduct regular live fire exercises, called tables, in order to maintain their certification as a canon artillery section.

Spc. Andrew Johnson-Hernandez, from Battery C, 1-41st FA, is a number-one man on a M109A6 Howitzer, also called a Paladin. He is responsible for preparing the round for firing, loading the round, as well as operating the breech and firing the howitzer when given the command to fire by the section chief.

“We start our certification process at the individual level and then we work our way up to section level certifications which is called Artillery Table VI,” said Johnson-Hernandez. “Being an artillery Soldier is great; we get to shoot, move and communicate, as well as learn a lot of different jobs within our own job.”

Staff Sgt. Dustin “Jesse James” Barker, a section chief with Battery C, 1-41 FA said their training is always to standard but there has been more focus on how they would fight a similar adversary.

“Safety is always a priority and we always train on our crew drills, occupations and misfire procedures, but out here, we are also focusing on how we fight a near-peer enemy,” said Barker. “We train hard out here and always keep in mind that there is a bigger picture, but we always want to make sure everyone comes back home.”

The next training phase for the Soldiers of 1-41 FA is Artillery Table XII. This next step in training will test these Soldiers on shooting, maneuvering and communicating as a platoon size element around the battlefield.

Special to the Frontline

DENTAC will offer dental assistant training for Department of Defense sponsored identification card holders beginning Sept. 30.

Although priority consideration will be given to spouses of active duty military personnel, this is a great opportunity for dependents (18 and over) and military retiree ID card holders to obtain training that will prepare them to take the required state board examinations, which will thereby enable them to ultimately volunteer or become employed in military or civilian dental clinics.

Application packets are now available and can be requested from FortStewart@redcross.org. Application packets must be completed and emailed to FortStewart@redcross.org by Aug. 30.

Interviews for the 10 available slots will begin the third week of September.

The dental assistant program is a six-month, 32 hour-per-week training program, and includes 200 hours of classroom and 700 hours of chair-side instruction.

Participant selection will be determined through interview. Those selected will receive intense training in all aspects of dental assisting - from dental radiology to dental anatomy, and from sterilizing dental instruments to chair-side clinic time.

Application packets provide details specific to all preliminary requirements, criteria and guidelines that will determine selection of trainees, as well as standards of conduct required of the selectees. Questions can be directed to the Red Cross at 767-2197 or 435-6903.

Selectees will be required to register as American Red Cross volunteers; attend Red Cross orientation; and complete an on-boarding path, required by the Dental Training Facility. After the final selection process, applicants must complete the American Red Cross basic life support class.

Selectees must provide for their own transportation and childcare needs during training.

Questions can be directed to the American Red Cross office at 767-2197.

SOQ challenges mental, physical limits for MEDDAC Soldiers

Kaytrina Curtis

Winn ACH Public Affairs

U.S. Army Medical Department Activity-Fort Stewart-Hunter Army Airfield's Winn Army Community Hospital hosted their Non-Commissioned Officer and Soldier of the Quarter Competition, Aug. 6-7.

This rigorous, two-day competition recognized Soldiers who demonstrated commitment to the Army values and warrior ethos.

Sgt. Demetria Mitchell and Spc. Devontea Blow won in their respective categories.

Day one of the competition consisted of carrying a minimum 35 pound rucksack for a five-mile road march, which began before the break of dawn at 4:30 a.m. The Soldiers had one hour and 15 minutes to complete the road march to receive a perfect score of 100 points. To do so in the heat and humidity of a summer day in Georgia was no easy task and pushed the Soldiers to their limit.

Soon after completing the ruck march, the competitors received a safety briefing, and then had to negotiate movement through 10 obstacles, such as the wire crawl, cargo net climb and maneuver up the incline wall. The last challenge of the morning consisted of a 500-word essay.

Mitchell, who serves as the NCO in charge of Inpatient Behavioral Health, said the process of the SOQ challenged her in ways she was not expecting.

"I am honored to be the NCO of the Quarter and I'm excited for what's to come," Mitchell said. "I think all the Soldiers should attempt (the competition) at least once, as it will push you to your limits through healthy competition."

Winn ACH senior enlisted leader, Command Sgt. Major Roderick Taylor, said the competition recognized those warriors who represent the force of the future.

"With Readiness being our number one priority, I wanted the competition to emphasize being able to quickly switch between physical and mental challenges while applying critical thinking," Taylor said. "All competitors truly ignited a path for our Soldiers to follow."

The next morning the competing Soldiers had to complete the Army Combat Fitness Test graded on the ACFT scoring-scale using the heavy scoring criteria, which Blow said was not only physically, but mentally tough.

Blow, a pharmacy tech at Hawks Troop Medical Clinic who recently earned his Air Assault Badge, said one of the toughest parts of the competition was the oral board.

"It challenges you in a very different way," Blow explained. "It displayed the focus we needed to not only speak what you know, but to show what you can do. I believe everyone should attend those competitions, whether it's the Soldier of the Month or Quarter or Year, it all pushes you to find a new limit."

Taylor expressed his appreciation for those who contended to be the best of the best.

"I am extremely proud of all of the Soldiers for competing and representing the organization at the highest level," Taylor said.

Master Black Belt helps leaders become lean

Kaytrina Curtis
Winn ACH Public Affairs

Multi-disciplinary team members from U.S. Army Medical Department Activity-Fort Stewart/Hunter Army Airfield Winn Army Community Hospital, and the DHA Low Country Market affiliate service representatives from Charleston 628th Air Force, Beaufort Naval Hospital, as well as, Region Health Command-Atlantic and Fort Rucker, were trained by a Regional Health Command-Atlantic Master Black Belt instructor on the Lean Leader Methodology at the Fort Stewart Education Center Aug. 5-9.

The Defense Health Agency's Quadruple Aim Performance Plan's process to improve readiness, better health, and to deliver better care at a lower cost is used to standardize performance across the Military Health System.

Winn ACH Lean Six Sigma Black Belt and Nurse Consultant, Outcomes Management, Anita Sachs, helped facilitate the course and said she loved seeing the interactions between the students as they participated in three simulations whereby the students could actually apply the concepts learned. Sachs said that by the third round of the simulation the teams had eliminated "non-value added" steps in the process, decreased errors and improved the efficiency. Sachs stressed the significance of having MEDDAC senior leader by-in.

"It was instrumental having Col. Michelle Munroe [Winn ACH Commander] provide opening remarks on Monday of the importance of adopting the Lean way of thinking," Sachs said, "and then her stopping by again on Friday to close out the week seeing the enthusiasm of the seventeen attendees."

Patient Advocate at Tuttle Army Health Clinic and former Marine, Calvin Glover, said his reason for attending the course was spurred in the hopes of improving patient satisfaction in the clinic.

"My goal was to learn as much as possible so that I can implement that knowledge into the healthcare system here at TAHC," Glover explained. "The overall goal is to make Tuttle more efficient and more effective by using Lean principles and concepts."

The concepts learned during the course will help the candidates take what they learned back to their respective departments, hospitals and/or clinics. This systematic approach to problem solving will help the framework of the process to be utilized across the MHS enterprise.

Glover said the week-long course exceeded his expectations and was one of the best classes he has ever attended in his career.

"The class taught me how to look at the healthcare system from a different perspective," Glover said, "and changing the narrative about, 'what we can't do and more of what we can do.'"

Many in the class echoed Glover's opinion of the course.

Supervisory Health Systems Specialist Administrator, Bonita Porter, said the course facilitators were "outstanding" and very "knowledge-

"I would recommend this training for all Leaders, Administrators and Staff involved in improving work flow processes and continuous improvements in eliminating "waste", Porter said. "Lean builds leaders at all levels in the organization."

"My expectations were met and exceeded," said Dr. Heather Saari, Warrior Transition Battalion clinical pharmacist. "I am currently applying this course to my process improvement for centralized booking for clinical pharmacy services. I will use this new knowledge in all my projects."

At the close of the course, attendees are now equipped to incorporate the DHA Quadruple Aim Performance 8-Step Practical Problem Solving Process to more aptly clarify and validate problems; breakdown problems/identify gaps; set improvement targets; determine root causes; develop countermeasures; implement countermeasures; confirm results and processes; as well as standardize successful processes.

Thoughts on marriage and baseball

Maj. John D. Hubbs
FSGA Operations Chaplain

1985 was a great year in my life. The St Louis Cardinals made the World Series and would have won if not for a terrible call by Don Denkinger. The Bears fielded the greatest team in NFL history. Most significantly, I married my high school sweetheart.

Friday is the 34th anniversary of the latter event. Since it is the Army way to share lessons learned, and 34 years makes me one of Fort Stewart's subject matter experts, I offer some thoughts to the topic of what it takes to have a happy marriage.

The most important characteristic of a successful marriage is shared values. It must be noted right away that this is rarely the first thing that draws two people together. The only things I knew about my wife at the beginning of our relationship was that she was a remarkably talented musician with great legs. As important as those traits might have been when we met as teenagers, what made our relationship solid even though we married young was that she was totally on board with the calling to ministry I sensed as a high school senior. We would serve God together.

That proved crucial because life has taken us through some lean years. In seminary, I sold a car to pay for our first child's birth. My first church paid me $270 per week (before taxes). I had seven years of higher education, but found myself applying for WIC vouchers to save some money on food for our kids. They say money problems ruin a lot of marriages, but ours was happy even when we were poor. We had each other, and we were doing the work God intended us to do.

The second key to a happy marriage is learning to appreciate what brings one's spouse joy. Despite our shared essential values, Melody and I are an example of opposites attracting. She listens to operatic vocalists like Sarah Brightman and Josh Groban. I prefer Elvis, 80's rock, and head-banging Jesus music. She watches the Hallmark channel, while I tune to ESPN and Fox Sports. Nevertheless, we have each learned to enjoy things we'd have never imagined doing if it weren't for our love for each other. When assigned to Europe, I spent my first four day pass driving to Salzburg, Austria to take the "Sound of Music" tour and visit Mozart's birthplace. Three years later, after I returned from a RAF mission, Melody surprised me with a vacation to Cooperstown, NY. I'll cherish the memories of both experiences for the rest of my life.

Finally, a successful marriage requires learning to forgive. I can't remember who wrote it, but I recall reading, "The cause for most divorces is the unwillingness of one or both people to accept that they married a human being." In other words, as imperfect beings we all have times when we say and do hurtful things. The key is to acknowledge the sin, choose to forgive, and make the offense off-limits during any future conflict. Reopening old wounds is never helpful. Nor is failing to treat them in the first place. Thankfully, my wife is good about letting me know the areas in which I could use improvement. For example, I tell her, "You look great for a woman your age." She says, "You just ruined a perfectly good compliment with a prepositional phrase." So, I am hopefully learning to do fewer things that require forgiveness, and I have learned to forgive ... but I will likely never forgive Don Denkinger.

Free uncontested divorce legal assistance offered

La-Tisha King
SJA Office, Paralegal Specialist

There are two types of divorce cases – contested and uncontested. An uncontested divorce is when the spouses agree on everything, do not need the court to divide assets or determine spousal support, child support, or custody, and both parties know where each other resides. In general, an uncontested divorce proceeds through the system more quickly, is less complicated and less expensive than contested divorces.

A contested divorce is one in which the parties do not agree about getting divorced or about the terms of the divorce. For example, the divorce is contested when the parties cannot agree as to who gets what property, who is responsible for the debt, spousal support, child support, or child custody, or one party does not know where their spouse resides.

Whether contested or uncontested, a divorce proceeding not only dissolves the marriage, but it also determines child custody and support for children born or adopted during the marriage. Some states require additional classes and documents to be completed prior to filing divorce paperwork involving child custody and support.

Once you complete your divorce paperwork, you must file the paperwork at the county courthouse where you live. If your case involves children, you will likely have to file the divorce case in the state where your children live, not where you live.

There is a cost to file the paperwork with the court. This is called a filing fee. Filing fees vary by county. We recommend that you call the county clerk where you intend to file prior to going to the courthouse to file.

Soldier and Family Legal Services provides limited legal assistance with pro se uncontested divorces with or without children. A pro se divorce is when you prepare and file the divorce paperwork yourself without legal representation. Pro se forms for Georgia can be found at <https://www.southernjudicialcircuit.com/Forms.htm>.

Pro se proceedings are not appropriate for all divorce cases. Depending on the facts of your divorce case (i.e., if your spouse has an attorney, you do not know where your spouse lives, you cannot agree how property will be split, or you or your spouse have a retirement), you may want to speak with a civilian attorney. SFLS maintains a list of civilian attorneys and other resources. This list is not an endorsement, referral, or recommendation of the attorneys and law firms listed. Prior to hiring an attorney, remember to assess him or her by contacting their office, researching clients' reviews, and asking for a free consultation.

If you have legal questions about divorce, the pro se forms, or if you need a referral list, please stop by SFLS. The Fort Stewart office is located at 1791 Gulick Ave., building 709 with office hours of Monday through Wednesday and Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Thursday 1 p.m. to 4 p.m.

Don't get beat by Georgia heat

Kaytrina Curtis
Winn ACH Public Affairs

The Fort Stewart-Hunter Army Airfield area has experienced exceptional heat this summer when temperatures ranged between 99-103 degrees May 25-30. Coupled with the temperatures, the high humidity feel like temperatures reached anywhere from 105 to 110 degrees, which when unprepared, could cause heat injury, stroke, or death.

According to the CDC, each year more than 600 people die of heat related injuries. Most of these injuries and deaths are preventable.

Deputy Commander for Clinical Services at Winn Army Community Hospital, Col. Charles Noble said environmental exposure is one of the most important safety considerations when planning outdoor activities.

"It does not matter if the activities are military operations/training or civilian outdoor events," Noble said. "The military risk assessment is a formalized process that forces Commanders to specifically assess the threat of the environment. Many times individuals are not as deliberate with assessing the threat or possible impact of the weather."

When the humidity is high, sweat does not evaporate as quickly and this process keeps the body from releasing heat as fast as it should.

"Heat exposure risk is cumulative," explained Noble. "For extended operations or multi-day events, leaders and individuals must factor in the weather and activities of the preceding days. The risk of heat injury rises on subsequent days of activity, simply due to the prior days' heat exposure."

Because of the extreme heat here, those who must spend time outside for work or other activities should mitigate their risks by closely monitoring their heat exposure and stay pre-hydrated as well as taking water breaks throughout the day.

Noble said risks for heat injury include prior heat injury, alcohol use, stimulant use (energy drinks, caffeine, nicotine, etc.). Over the Counter cold medications, and certain prescription medications. Some classes of behavioral health medicines, narcotics, allergy medicines, and blood pressure medicines are the most common).

If a person does experience a heat related injury, time is of the essence. Noble said the initial treatment goal is to decrease the patient's core body temperature as quickly as possible.

"Initial on-site treatment should be done through removal from the heat, loosening/removal of clothing, fanning, use of ice packs in the armpits and groin, use of an ice sheet," Noble said.

Stay safe, stay cool, and stay alive. Remember, never leave children or pets in vehicles unattended.

The Marne Standard on customs and courtesy, as an extension of Army Regulation 600-25 explains the proper response to 'Retreat' and 'To the Colors.' When in uniform and not in formation, Soldiers will face the flag (or music), stand at attention, and salute until the last note of the music is sounded. When not in uniform, stand at attention (remove head covering, if any, with right hand and place right hand over heart until last note of music is sounded. If you are in a moving vehicle during the playing of "Retreat" and "To The Colors", safely come to a halt. On buses and trucks, only the senior occupant will dismount and render appropriate courtesy. Passengers and drivers of other vehicles will dismount and render the appropriate courtesy.

39th Chief of Staff of the Army shares farewell message

MARK A. MILLEY

*General, United States Army
39th Chief of Staff*

More than a million Soldiers -- across the Regular Army, Army National Guard, and Army Reserves -- wear the cloth of our Nation. As my time as the 39th Chief of Staff of the Army comes to a close, I thank you, your Army Families, and the nearly quarter of a million dedicated Army Civilians who make America's Army the world's premier land force.

The international environment is uncertain, and readiness for ground combat has been our top priority. Our fundamental task remains like no other -- it is to win in the unforgiving crucible of ground combat. No matter where we are around the globe, our Soldiers are leading cohesive and lethal teams with courage, commitment, and character. When our Nation calls, I have no doubt our Army will be ready to dominate in ground combat as part of the joint force.

We have also recognized the changing character of war. To meet the challenge, we have made hard decisions and directed precious resources toward modernization, committing to six priorities and establishing Army Futures Command. Every day, our Nation's adversaries are competing aggressively in all domains, and we have developed an operating concept and are fielding new organizations, equipment, and advanced technologies to achieve overmatch in this complex environment. We need to maintain this momentum in building an agile and adaptive Army to prevail on a future battlefield.

Today, the collective strength of our Soldiers provides the most skilled, flexible, and combat hardened Army in our Nation's history. Our Soldiers are the best of our Nation - you are on the ground, in the mud, walking into harm's way, and defending freedom's frontier. You are the ones delivering results day in and day around the world. Thank you for committing your lives to the defense of the Constitution of the United States and its essential American principle -- that we are all born free and equal.

Your blood, sweat, tears, and sacrifices have kept our Nation free for 244 years and you represent all that is good about the United States. I could not be prouder. Hollyanne and I are immensely grateful and humbled to have had the opportunity to serve with you for a purpose much bigger than ourselves.
