Additions to rail marshalling area to reduce time it takes to deploy

Spc. William Griffen

Area community representatives were led on a tour of the rail load operations March 5 on Fort Stewart and were informed on a proposed plan for the rail marshalling area which could reduce the time it takes to deploy.

Command Sergeants Major Rebecca Myers, Fort Stewart Garrison's senior enlisted leader, Yetta Stewart, senior enlisted advisor at the Army Field Support Battalion on post, and other Fort Stewart-Hunter Army Airfield representatives led the tour and briefed guests on the RMA's functions and how efficiencies in operations can be increased at the RMA.

"These additions will cut down the time it takes to deploy in half," Stewart said. "That will mean Soldiers can spend more time with their Families, rather than spending so much time and effort here at the RMA."

Stewart, explained the improvements to the RMA are necessary for meeting the demand to rapidly push out military equipment to meet combat power needs at far-away locations while easing the pressure on Soldiers.

Richard Rayman, unit movement coordinator at the RMA, said a unit's Soldiers load armored vehicles and tanks onto the rail line at the RMA for deployments, while RMA civilians assist with the process.

"The rail marshalling area plays a pivotal role in our various deployments," Stewart said.

Rayman said currently the RMA can handle a brigade combat team's full line of equipment at a time.

Thousands of pieces of equipment, such as M1 Abrams tanks, M2 Bradley Fighting Vehicles, M109 Paladin Howitzers, Joint Light Tactical Vehicles, and High Mobility Multipurpose Wheeled Vehicles are secured with chains to the rail line by Soldiers and then inspected by the RMA's civilians, so the equipment can be shipped by train.

To increase efficiency and capacity, Rayman said in addition to the rail line, a plan is in place to conduct wheeled convoy operations through the wheel marshalling area, which will be co-located at the RMA. There are also plans for new rail spurs to be added to the RMA in order to increase loading and unloading capacity. To reduce future costs, the container handling facility will buy new containers instead of relying on leased containers.

"The whole project will cost $39 million and will take seven to nine years to see its full completion," Rayman said.

Those on the tour included Retired Lt. Gen. William Webster, former 3rd ID commander and Coastal Georgia Military Affairs Coalition representative; PJ Waldrop, state director of Senator David Perdue's office; and Sam Tostensen, field representative from Senator Perdue's office.

Soldier-centered approach helping lead ground modernization efforts

Sean Kimmons
Army News Service

WASHINGTON – Nearly two years into its largest modernization overhaul in four decades, the Army looks to continue its momentum of developing new ground systems centered on input from Soldiers.

Testifying before the House Armed Services Committee's tactical air and land forces subcommittee, the Army's acquisition chief told lawmakers March 5 that adequate funding is needed to build on those efforts.

"The Army's modernization program takes time and money," said Bruce Jette, assistant secretary of the Army for acquisition, logistics and technology. "We are working to achieve efficiency wherever possible and we need sufficient, predictable, sustained and timely funding to ensure a successful outcome."

REALIGNING FUNDS

In its fiscal year 2021 budget request, the Army has realigned $9 billion to fund its six modernization priorities over the next five fiscal years.

In total, there is now $63 billion over that period aligned against those priorities: long-range precision fires, next-generation combat vehicle, future vertical lift, the network, air and missile defense and Soldier lethality.

The realigned funds come after senior leaders carried out extensive "night court" sessions that led to the elimination or reduction of 80 programs across the Army.

In the latest budget request, the top program being canceled is about $122 million for the Advanced Precision Kill Weapon System, a guidance kit for helicopter-launched rockets. The largest program reduction is $222 million for upgrades to Bradley Fighting Vehicles.

The Army intends to replace the Bradley with the Optionally Manned Fighting Vehicle. In January, the Army halted its solicitation for a rapid prototype and now plans to solicit it again to gain more interest from industry.

"We've made it clear OMFV is continuing," Jette told lawmakers. "The objective we were pursuing is unchanged. It's the methodology by which we're trying to get there."

Jette also thanked Congress for granting the Army new authorities to strengthen its acquisition process.

As a result of the middle-tier acquisition authority, the Army has been able to rapidly prototype and accelerate select modernization efforts. Currently, there are 11 rapid prototyping efforts and one rapid fielding effort, he said.

In addition, the other transaction authority has allowed the Army to attract small companies and non-traditional businesses. In fiscal 2019, the Army awarded 830 agreements valued at roughly $5 billion, he said.

Jette also credited the unique relationship between his office and Army Futures Command for bringing system concepts and designs to life.

"Together they are aligning requirements, development and acquisition expertise with representatives from testing, logistics, science and technology, and other important Army communities," he said.

The collaboration has quickly delivered equipment to Soldiers, such as the Enhanced Night Vision Goggle-Binocular and the Command Post Computing Environment, a software system that supports mission command.

"And, in both cases, statement of need to delivering those capabilities was less than 18 months," Gen. John Murray, the AFC commander, said during the hearing.

The general also noted successful test shots of the Precision Strike Missile and the Extended-Range Cannon Artillery, which both aim to greatly extend the range of two key long-range precision fire delivery systems.

SOLDIER-CENTERED APPROACH

The Army has also relied on Soldiers to play a larger role in developing new equipment.

"In all of our efforts we are leveraging a Soldier-centered design approach to delivering capability, putting Soldiers at the center of our production," Murray said.

Before, Soldiers typically did not see a new piece of equipment until a limited user test.

"And it usually didn't fare well because we didn't have Soldiers involved from the front," he said. "So that has become a standard principle for everything."

Soldiers, he said, have been heavily involved with the next-generation squad weapon, as companies vie to replace the M4 carbine and M249 squad automatic weapon.

The Integrated Visual Augmentation System has been another success of Soldier feedback. Murray said there has already been over 6,000 hours of Soldier touchpoints that have helped engineers make modifications to the system.

"Within this approach, we are committed to learning early and learning often," he said. "This means focusing on characteristics and working with industry and our Soldiers to make sure that when we do write requirements, we get them right the first time."

Army celebrates women's contributions, service

Army Public Affairs

WASHINGTON – As the nation celebrates Women's History Month, the U.S. Army extends its gratitude to the women who have served, and continue to serve, in its ranks. Women have played vital roles in the U.S. Army since the Revolutionary War, and today's women – Soldiers, veterans, Family members and civilian employees – are critical members of the Army team.

"More than 181,000 women serve in the Army today, from enlisted personnel to general officers," said Ryan McCarthy, Secretary of the Army. "The Army is proud of our women Soldiers, who serve with distinction as role models as they exemplify our highest values."

Women Soldiers make up 18 percent of the regular Army, the Army National Guard and Army Reserve, and 36 percent of the Army's civilian workforce is female.

Today's women serve in every career field in the Army. Nearly 1,500 female Soldiers have accessed into infantry, armor, and fire-support occupations; forty-two women have graduated from Ranger School, and five have been assigned to the Ranger Regiment; and last June, Brig. Gen. Laura Yeager became the first woman to command an Army infantry division.

The Army continues to integrate female Soldiers into all units and occupations, and has adopted gender-neutral standards for all occupational specialties. Female and male Soldiers undergo the same training and must pass course requirements to be awarded a military occupational specialty in any career field.

"The Army is people and the incredible contributions and achievements of our female Soldiers contribute significantly to the strength of America's Army," said Gen. James McConville, Chief of Staff of the Army.

"Our diversity and commitment to selecting the best-qualified people, regardless of gender, for each job in the Army makes the all-volunteer force the most-ready and powerful in the world."

From the 21,000 women who served in the Army Nurse Corps during WWI, to the 150,000 who served in the Women's Army Corps during WWII, to the 181,000 who proudly serve today – the Army salutes our women Soldiers.

"More than 181,000 women serve in the Army today. The Army is proud of our women Soldiers."

COVID-19: Army stands ready

Devon L. Suits
Army News Service

The Army is taking the necessary steps to combat the spread of COVID-19, all while simultaneously implementing measures to treat personnel impacted by the disease, the Army's top medical officer said March 5.

With the emerging concern over the spread of COVID-19, the safety and health of all servicemembers have become one of DOD's top priorities, said Thomas McCaffery, the assistant secretary of defense for health affairs.

According to data collected on March 4, four people have tested positive for the novel coronavirus throughout the Department of Defense, McCaffery said, as he testified with other defense health officials before the House Committee on Appropriations' defense subcommittee.

One Soldier and two dependents stationed in South Korea were among the four that recently tested positive for the virus, said Lt. Gen. Scott Dingle, the Army surgeon general.

Twelve others throughout the DOD are "suspected" to have the virus and are awaiting results, added McCaffery. In support, the department has distributed "force health protection guidance," based mostly on information provided by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

COVID-19 can be spread from person-to-person, either through close contact, or through contact with "respiratory droplets" that can be produced after a person coughs or sneezes, according to information on the CDC's website. People tend to be the most contagious when they are symptomatic. However, there are reports of COVID-19 spreading before a person shows symptoms.

The released DOD guidance outlines proper health-care worker protection, along with ways to screen and report a patient when the virus is detected, McCaffery said. The documents also identify ways to self-protect against the virus, which includes proper hygiene practices.

The military health system is part of a broader interagency approach to combat COVID-19, McCaffery said. This ongoing joint initiative, which includes the CDC and National Institute of Health, is working to develop a COVID-19 vaccine, along with a separate anti-viral therapy.

It will take months before a vaccine starts the clinical trial process, he added. Once a vaccine moves past its trial phase, the Food and Drug Administration will start its research and analysis process, which could take several years to complete.

"Similarly, (with the) anti-viral therapy, we might be closer in terms of having something usable. It is actually in clinical trials right now and testing for efficacy," he said.

Coinciding with the DOD's methodology, the Army is taking a "three-pronged approach to prevent, detect, and treat," COVID-19, Dingle said.

"Prevention is the education awareness of all the Soldiers and family members within an installation commander's or senior commander's footprint," Dingle said. "The detection piece (includes) screenings, that we are doing ... to verify the presence," of the disease.

If the virus were to spread, the Army stands ready, having "pandemic response plans" at all installations, Dingle added.

The best way to prevent the illness is to avoid exposure, according to the CDC. In South Korea, leaders have already released guidance to limit the mass congregation of personnel, Dingle said.

And while operations continue in the area, Soldiers and families are also reminded to avoid contact with people that are sick, and to avoid touching their eyes, ears and nose. Further, common use areas and items should be frequently sanitized.

Accelerated goal for future vertical lift will be met, leaders say

Joe Lacdan
Army News Service

FORT MEADE, Md. – The Army's chief of acquisitions assured lawmakers March 10 that the Army will meet its accelerated goal of bringing future long-range assault aircraft to Soldiers by fiscal year 2030.

"I think we're about as aggressive as I'm prepared to go at this point," said Assistant Secretary of the Army for Acquisition, Logistics and Technology Bruce Jette during a hearing of the House Armed Services Committee's tactical air and land forces subcommittee March 10. "But I think it's still well within reason that we can get there by (2030)."

The Army has been working to replace the UH-60 Black Hawk helicopter, the Army's current medium-utility transport with the Future Long-Range Assault Aircraft. The aging aircraft has been the service's primary transport vehicle since the mid-1970s.

The Army Futures Command in Austin, Texas, has been working with two different vendors to test demonstrator models for the FLRAA.

Congress appropriated additional funding for the project in fiscal year 2020 after the Army claimed "significant" progress in its field testing, Jette said.

In addition, the service has been developing the Future Attack Reconnaissance Aircraft to replace the OH-58 Kiowa Scout single-engine helicopter, which performs target acquisition and armed reconnaissance.

The OH-58 served ground troops from 1969 until a few years ago when half of the AH-64 Apaches took over as the Army's primary scouting aircraft.

The FARA will feature greater, more flexible lethality than the OH-58, which lacked in that capability, Jette said. A more integrated ecosystem will enable greater survivability.

Both aircraft have significant improvement over what they are replacing, Jette said.

These aircraft are intending specifically to work together and understanding the air picture, it'll give them an increased survivability by knowing where air defenses are, where radars are, how to use the nap-of-the-earth flights and mask from different systems."

"Elements of overmatch that we see on the aircraft, we see in reach -- it's got three subcomponents: speed, range and endurance," Jette said.

During the FLRAA development, Jette said the current plan continues to include upgrading more than 750 UH-60s to newer models. He said the service plans to upgrade the National Guard's supply first by 2022 and then the active duty fleet by 2024.

The upgrades are currently being implemented at the Corpus Christi Army Depot located on the South Texas coastline.

"We believe we'll continue moving through the rest of the fleet out until about (2034)" Jette said. "The conversion process is going well. Corpus Christi is doing a fine job with the conversion process."

"At this point, we're not impeding the process ... Depots are very strong, very capable – they have a great deal of resources."

The Army's program executive office works in conjunction with the Future Vertical Lift Cross-Functional Team and AFC to develop capabilities that support multi-domain operations and modernization. The Army's future vertical lift initiatives will approach $1 billion on costs, and ranks among the service's largest portfolios in terms of budget.

Brig. Gen. Walter Rugen, director of the Future Vertical Lift CFT, also said he remains confident that the service is on course to meet the critical demand to modernize its helicopter fleet.

"The (budget) request that was made and supported by Congress really set the conditions for four-year acceleration from where we are currently in tech demonstration to program-of-record and a full weapons system," Rugen said, adding, "...basically in this budget you see a four-year acceleration."

Installation earns AMC, IMCOM communication awards

Staff Report

Fort Stewart-Hunter Army Airfield public affairs employees' were recognized March 11 for outstanding efforts in communication with the announcement of the Army Materiel Command 2019 David G. Harris Public Affairs Competition and the U.S. Installation Command's Communications Competition.

AMC recognized Kevin Larson as the first place infographic winner for "Where There's Smoke," which also won first place at IMCOM's competition. Also recognized was the Hunter Army Airfield Public Affairs Officer, Daniel Malta, who was named the John T. Anderson Military Videographer of the Year for his work at Fort Sill, Oklahoma. Malta will now compete at the Army-level Maj. Gen. Keith L. Ware Communications Competition.

U.S. Army Installation Management Command announced results of the IMCOM-level Maj. Gen. Keith L. Ware Communications Competition, March 6.

Winners were chosen for contributions in print, community relations and visual information from garrisons around the world.

Malta earned IMCOM's Civilian Broadcast Journalist of the Year award and was also named the IMCOM's Army Communicator of the Year. Larson's Infographic category also earned first in the IMCOM Keith L. Ware competition. Fort Stewart-Hunter Army Airfield also placed first for the Fort Stewart's Severe Weather Guide and earned its best digital media platform award.

The AMC Public Affairs office established the David G. Harris Public Affairs Competition in 2015 to recognize excellence for public affairs practitioners throughout the Army Materiel Command. The competition is named for Harris, former public affairs chief of the U.S. Army Missile Command -- now U.S. Army Aviation and Missile Command.

Editors note: AMC award information provided by Rachel DeLoach, U.S. Army Materiel Command.

Everything you wanted to know about controlled burns on Fort Stewart

Detailed weather analysis happens before starting a burn to ensure smoke rises into the atmosphere and has little impact on the ground.

Fort Stewart's Directorate of Public Works Forestry Branch conducts controlled burns in the installation's training area via helicopter and on-the-ground assets. Using a helicopter allows for several small fires to quickly burn together as a large fire, minimizing drift smoke.

BURN SEASON
December 1 - June 30

Fort Stewart's annual burn goal is 115,000 acres.

An average controlled burn is 600 acres.

= 5,000 acres

= 100 acres

WHY WE BURN

The primary reason is to create open and safe training areas for our military to hone its craft.

The second is for wildlife conservation. Burns encourage healthy lands for long-leaf pine, gopher tortoises, and red-cockaded woodpeckers.
