Installation exercise tests emergency response capabilities

Molly Cooke
Fort Stewart Public Affairs

Motorists encountered delays as they entered select gates on Fort Stewart-Hunter Army Airfield earlier this week and that's exactly what emergency response crews had in mind.

As drivers weaved in and out of concrete barriers making their way on and off the installation, what many didn't realize is that they were playing an important part in the latest integrated installation safety exercise.

Installation agencies practiced their emergency response capabilities, Dec. 7-8 with a barrier exercise at Fort Stewart's Britt Gate and Hunter Army Airfield's Wilson gate.

The Directorate of Plans, Training, Mobilization and Support hosts two integrated installation exercises annually. This week, the installation had a chance to implement and validate emergency response to a scenario that involved placing barriers at our installation access points.

"Barrier exercises are important because the concrete barriers can mitigate vehicles coming onto the installation and slow down traffic for better security," said Beau Bradley, DPTMS garrison exercise planner.

Bradley was responsible for creating this week's exercise. He, along with others from the DPTMS as well as the directorates of emergency services, human resources, public works, and other garrison offices came together to hash out the details to make the exercise rigorous and successful.

"As the exercise designer, I try to network with all major stakeholders on both Fort Stewart and Hunter Army Airfield to develop robust exercises that ensure the safety and security of all Soldiers and Families," he said.

While small in scope, this week's exercise will lead up to a larger-scale exercise, Stewart Guardian, scheduled for April 16-22, 2022.

"The garrison commander, in some regards, serves as a community mayor," Bradley said. "Part of his responsibility is the protection of the installation which means that we have a requirement twice a year to host protection exercises."

Planning for the exercise began months in advance. The exercise was designed to be challenging but not impossible. Overall, the intent was to identify areas of both success and improvement.

"As with any training event, we observed areas to improve on and these will be addressed on the corrective action plans," Bradley said.

Garrison Commander Col. Manny Ramirez called the exercise a success.

"This exercise was an excellent opportunity to test our systems and capabilities," Ramirez said. "It's all about learning and growing in order to keep our community safe."

While the exercise did result in some minor traffic impacts due to the implementation of the barriers, it proved successful in identifying areas to sustain and improve in the event that barriers are needed for a real world emergency.

Fort Stewart exercise planners and leadership appreciate the patience of the community during this week's exercise.

Spartans inform industry of desired communications pilot outcomes

Capt. Sean Minton
2nd ABCT

During the Army's recent Technical Exchange Meeting 7, the "Spartan Brigade," 2nd Armored Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division – the supporting unit for the Army's upcoming ABCT On-The-Move network communications pilot – together with 3rd Infantry Division leadership, provided feedback and insight to industry on pilot requirements and desired outcomes.

The ABCT OTM network pilot will be held early next year on Fort Stewart. It will test multiple concepts of employment of current and maturing commercial technologies to garner real-time Soldier feedback that will inform future decisions on the delivery of mobile network communications capability to armored formations.

This seventh TEM, held on Dec. 2 in Nashville, Tennessee, was part of the Army's two-year iterative capability set acquisition and fielding process and focused on the delivery of the Unified Network. The event was open to traditional defense contractors and non-traditional vendors, attending both in person and online.

TEM 7 included a warfighter panel entitled "Warfighter Perspective: Networking to Support the Multi-Domain Operations Concept." During the panel, Soldiers provided input from an operational perspective to inform industry's research and development efforts that align with a suite of new network and communications technologies expected to be fielded in 2025.

"[An armored formation] is kind of like a weather system," said 3rd ID Deputy Commanding General-Maneuver, Brig. Gen. Jasper Jeffers, who chaired the panel. "The 3rd Infantry Division and [its] armored formations pick up, start moving at 35 mph, and they don't stop. There are challenges with the network, there are challenges with how we communicate, and challenges with how we maintain the speed of decision-making that you just don't see in other types of formations, and we're going to have think differently about how we deliver that."

The ABCT OTM network pilot will inform Army design and fielding decisions to deliver a modernized mobile tactical network to armored brigades as part of Capability Set 25. The Army's efforts to modernize tactical networks has already manifested in Capability Set 21 for infantry brigades and is being developed in Capability Set 23 for Stryker brigades, with armored brigades to be equipped with modernized network capabilities as part of Capability Set 25.

During the warfighter panel, Maj. Todd Klinzing-Donaldson, the 2nd ABCT's top network and communications officer, described how OTM network communications increase survivability on today's battlefield and will be critical in future multi-domain operations.

"If I could leave you with one thing to takeaway, it would be survivability," Klinzing-Donaldson said. "We have to remain mobile in order to survive."

Army leaders: Soldiers can build strength from self-care

Joseph Lacdan
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Jim Czarnik turned swiftly to his three-year-old daughter as she ran into a neighbor's yard on a sunny spring afternoon.

"Sasha, stop!" Czarnik shouted angrily to his child, who had spotted a ball to play with. His mind had flashed back to his three-month deployment and suddenly he imagined his toddler running across a minefield instead of a green lawn. He pivoted to his battlefield instincts where he remembered that moving on hard packed roads usually meant safety from mines.

When he saw Sasha step off the sidewalk that spring day in 2002, it sparked a reaction in Czarnik, who instinctively tried to protect his daughter as if she were one of his Soldiers.

"Jim," his wife said. "It's a ball."

Czarnik, then a young emergency medicine physician and Army officer who had just returned from his second overseas mission, stood perplexed. After visiting an ice cream parlor, Czarnik wanted to spend a relaxing day with his family in Southern Pines, North Carolina.

He suddenly felt ashamed that his outburst had terrified his three-year-old.

"The environment triggered a reaction that was already well rehearsed in my body," Czarnik recalled during the University of Southern California's 2021 Virtual Body Computing Conference on Oct. 22. "So I reacted without thinking. I think that's what struck me. After it happened, I recognized immediately it was the wrong reaction and I knew why I reacted that way."

Later that week, Czarnik's 3-year-old left a blanket in the middle of the family's living room, triggering the ire of her father.

"Hey!" Jim said. "You know that doesn't belong here."

"She's three!" his wife said.

Stunned by his reactions, Jim realized he had failed to transition from his deployment mindset and to separate his military training from his home life in the spring of 2002. He would later acknowledge he had experienced the first signs of post-traumatic stress disorder.

He had taken the war home.

Czarnik had been in the middle of Special Operations unit rotations to Afghanistan following the events of 9/11. He had spent two months in the Middle Eastern nation in late 2001 and another three in early 2002. "You knew you were going back so it wasn't like mentally you could relax," Czarnik said.

He struggled transitioning back to his home life for the brief few weeks he had with his family as he awaited his next deployment to go back to Afghanistan.

"What happens over the course of time, is combat becomes normal," Czarnik. "We got praised for it, we got awarded for it, and when we went back into our house, many of us failed to actively, mentally transition into our civilian habits.

"And it's our family that bears the brunt of that," he added.

Nearly 20 years later, Czarnik, now a colonel and command surgeon of U.S. Army Special Operations Command at Fort Bragg, North Carolina, joined a panel hosted by the USC Center for Body Computing.

Left, Maj. Gen. Joshua Rudd, Special Operations Command-Pacific commander, and right, and Command Master Chief Petty Officer David Isom, discuss how Soldiers and U.S. service members can better care for themselves and boost readiness.

Czarnik said Soldiers returning from deployments often face a battle within themselves, as he did. That week in 2002 marked the start of what would become a difficult nine years for Czarnik and his Family.

Col. Jim Czarnik, left, then the command surgeon for U.S. Army Africa, presents a certificate of appreciation to Lt. Fatou Kine Dieng, an emergency room doctor at the Hospital Military De Ouakam, Dakar, Senegal, Jan. 29, 2016.

Czarnik became distant and withdrawn at home. He grew irritable when approached by his peers, his family or strangers.

He said Soldiers must be willing to admit they need to seek assistance for their behavioral health in order to actively transition back to home life. Finally, in 2011, his symptoms had grown worse.

He decided to seek help for his symptoms at the Supreme Headquarter Allied Powers Europe clinic, where he served as commander.

"What takes real courage is stepping out of your comfort zone and stepping into a zone of vulnerability," said Czarnik, who was the DoD senior physician on the ground for the multi-nation response to the 2016 Ebola outbreak in West Africa. "And allowing yourself to be transparent so that you can become stronger, faster and perform better. That's where the real courage lies."

If Soldiers fail to take care of themselves, the effect could have a spiraling impact on Soldier readiness that could spread throughout their units. Czarnik has participated in research to help optimize and understand the cognitive cues that lead to battlefield success. Czarnik didn't begin to fully heal until he took part in a 10-week outpatient program in 2019 at Landstuhl Regional Medical Center Germany.

Special Operations Command-Pacific's commander, Maj. Gen. Joshua Rudd, said during the panel that despite technological advances in warfighting, the service must prioritize Soldiers over machines.

"We use a lot of equipment, hardware and technology to enhance the performance of the human," Rudd said. "But ultimately, it's about the individual. It's about the teams, it's about the formations that fight our nation's wars. And at Special Operations Command, we try to never lose sight of that."

The focus falls in line with the Army's People Strategy, which focuses on optimizing Soldier and civilian talent to create cohesion and promote diversity within its ranks.

Rudd said it's important to care for the mental health of Soldiers which effectively enhances warfighting capabilities. To help prioritize Soldiers and their families, Special Operations Command launched an initiative called Preservation of the Force and Family to develop longevity and performance through integrated and holistic human performance programs.

Without taking care of a Soldier's mental health, maintaining readiness can be a daunting challenge, as Soldiers continue to be heavily tasked with training and overseas duties, he added.

"[Warfighting] is physically demanding, it's emotionally demanding," Rudd said. "As much as the environment is changing ... you got to be tough. You got to really want to do this, or ... you're probably going to fail when it matters most."

The Army added holistic health guidelines to its doctrine in October 2020. The service introduced its Holistic, Health and Fitness System, or H2F to its field manual, to further invest in Soldier readiness and lethality and reduce rehabilitation rates and injury recovery times.

The branch designed H2F not only to optimize Soldier health and performance, but to develop adaptive leaders who promote readiness and build units designed to enable readiness and support Soldier optimization in tactical environments.

"[Warfighting] is going take a toll on the individual, physically, cognitively, spiritually, psychologically, and socially," Rudd said. "By extension, our relationships, and our families are going to be impacted."

Retired Marine Corps Col. Clarke Lethin said that the military must be more accepting of troops who struggle to resume normal life after returning from a deployment or mission. He added that the U.S. military must train its junior leaders and front-line supervisors to identify when one of their troops appears to be struggling.

"We're recognizing that it's okay to have our folks identify that they may or may not be right," he said.

TRICARE for Life hosts podcast series

Tricare.mil

FALLS CHURCH, Va.— Have questions about TRICARE For Life (TFL)? The “Get to Know TRICARE” podcast just launched a new series, called “Getting Care With TRICARE For Life.” Like the “TRICARE For Life 101” series, this new series will continue to provide helpful conversations around important TFL topics. New episodes take a look at covered services, out-of-pocket costs, and the claims process.

If you want to make the most of your TFL coverage, learning what Medicare and TRICARE covers is a good place to start. The first episode, “What Is and Isn’t Covered by TRICARE For Life,” features an interview with Anne Breslin, the TFL program manager at the Defense Health Agency. You can listen to this episode now on Apple Podcasts and Spotify.

“It’s very important that you take an active role in verifying coverage because TRICARE and Medicare coverage policies aren’t identical,” said Breslin. “In this episode, I talk about services that TFL covers and doesn’t cover, as well as how you can determine if a service or benefit is covered by Medicare, TRICARE, or both.”

As described in the TRICARE and Medicare Turning Age 65 Brochure, “TRICARE has special rules and limitations for certain types of care, and some types of care aren’t covered at all.” Medicare also has limits on the amounts of care it covers.

This is the first of three episodes to be released as part of the “Getting Care With TRICARE For Life” series. Upcoming episodes will cover costs associated with TFL, different scenarios in which Medicare or TRICARE pays, and how to file claims.

Subscribe to the podcast on Apple Podcasts or Spotify so you don’t miss future episodes.

Majjhimà patipadà: finding the middle way

Capt. Songkran Waiyaka

703rd BSB, 2nd ABCT Chaplain

What is the middle way? The middle way is the way to live your life appropriately. You should not be living your life too controlled or too laid back.

To keep the explanation simple, let's explore the analogy of an American Freeway. A freeway consists of three lanes; the far left lane is a fast lane, the middle lane is a moderate lane, and the right lane is a slow lane.

If you are in hurry, you take the fast lane to get your destination on time or before time. If you are not in hurry, but you want to get your destination in a timely manner, you take a middle lane. If your car is not in good condition, or you want to take your time on the road, you take a slow lane. While choosing lanes, you must also remember you are not alone on the road. You must be responsible and look to your left, your right, look ahead, and look back to keep yourself and others safe.

To live the middle way, you must look at your life and identify yourself as who you are or what is your duty? I am a father, I am a mother, I am a son, I am a daughter, I am a teacher, I am a student, I am a Soldier etc. Everyone has his or her own purpose, roles, responsibilities, and methods to accomplish a goal. Definitely, everyone has different amounts of resilience, vitality, skills, resources etc. In living the middle way, it is important not to look at other individuals and compare their life and abilities to yours, but simply live your life with your destination in mind. When you are on the road of life, you should know which lane you need to take and the right effort and perseverance needed to progress.

The middle way is one of the eight fold path or eight Magga in Buddhism. It is a path of moral good living. It is a path that consists of making an effort to restrain unwholesome things that have not yet arisen, to eradicate the unwholesome that have arisen, to develop wholesome things that have not yet arisen, and to make the effort to protect those wholesome things that have arisen.

By knowing yourself, your purpose, and your abilities, and living your life accordingly, your life becomes easier and happier because you are focusing on your course of action. Remember that life is not a race. Every individual has purpose in life. Sometimes you might find yourself in a slow lane at the beginning of an endeavor. Once you find that you can do more, you increase your performance. Sometimes, you might want to try the fast lane. You might have success or failure on your journey. That is fine. Your experiences will allow you to see which lane you should use to reach the destination your life was designed for.

Recently, we changed to daylight savings time. We cannot control the Sun to go slower or faster, but we can adapt our man made time to make nature's time work better for our purposes. What can we learn from this that we can apply to our life? In our life we cannot control things or people around us. Often our efforts to control lead us to blame, judge and compare. This causes our life to be complicated and results in our unhappiness. What we can do instead is adapt our thoughts, attitudes and life style to better fit into our Family and community. Moving into the middle way, we live our life paying attention to the path to our destination. Without blaming, judging, and comparing, our life will be happier.

In the Army we do After Action Reports to identify what went wrong, what went right, and how we can do things better in the future. It is an action that reminds us that the past is gone, the future has not come yet, and that the only thing we can experience is the present moment. This time of the year is a good time for us to look back over our lives by using the AAR model. We can then use this information to steer our life towards the middle way and keep it running smoothly.

CAMP HOVEY, South Korea — Soldiers from the Fort Stewart-based 92nd Chemical Company are helping to keep a rotational Army unit ready to fight and win on the Korean Peninsula.

The company is deployed to support the Fort Bliss, Texas-based 3rd Armored Brigade Combat Team, 1st Armored Division, as a part of a regular rotation of American combat forces to South Korea.

The company is assigned to the 83rd Chemical, Biological, Radiological, Nuclear Battalion, 48th Chemical Brigade and 20th Chemical, Biological, Radiological, Nuclear, Explosives (CBRNE) Command.

As part of the Department of Defense's premier all hazards formation, Soldiers and civilians from the Aberdeen Proving Ground, Maryland-headquartered 20th CBRNE Command deploy from 19 bases in 16 states to take on the world's most dangerous hazards and threats.

Known as Dragon Soldiers, CBRN specialists from the 92nd Chemical Company provided support to 2nd Brigade Engineer Battalion during joint training events and certified the battalion's Nuclear, Biological and Chemical Reconnaissance Vehicle Platoon.

Staff Sgt. Patrick Allen, the 92nd Chemical Company's reconnaissance platoon sergeant, served as observer, coach and trainer for the NBCRV Platoon certification. Following the certification, the platoon has three crews ready to operate independently during mounted CBRN missions.

The certification was part of the company's ongoing mission to support the combat brigade.

"Our mission is to provide support for the counter Weapons of Mass Destruction operations throughout the peninsula and to provide CBRN reconnaissance, surveillance and decontamination support during unified land operations to the rotational Armored Brigade Combat Team," said Capt. Mark J. Evans, the commander of the 92nd Chemical Company.

According to Evans, the highlight of the deployment so far has been the company's participation in Exercise Warrior Bulldog Strike from Sept. 24 through Oct. 3 with armored units from the 1st Battalion, 67th Regiment and 1st Battalion, 77th Regiment.

The 92nd Chemical Company's 1st and 2nd Platoons supported a combined arms breach and the 3rd Platoon participated in a wet gap crossing during the exercise.

"The [3rd Platoon] was able to work not only with the armor company but also the engineers and a Republic of Korea Army CBRNE Response Team," Evans said, a 15-year Army veteran from Rochester, Indiana, who was previously stationed on Kadena Air Base in Japan. "The engineers spent time working with our platoon in order to use their digging assets to improve our decontamination site and dig sumps for our run off water."

The CBRN specialists also helped to keep troops from the combat brigade in the fight following a simulated chemical attack.

"During the breach, 1st Platoon provided chemical reconnaissance of a simulated chemical attack and reconnaissance of a suspected WMD facility," Evans said. "2nd Platoon provided decontamination of the armor unit that was hit with the chemical attack."

Evans said Soldiers from the 92nd Chemical Company are contributing to security on the Korean Peninsula and stability in Northeast Asia by helping U.S. and South Korean troops to stay ready to fight.
