Staff Sgt. Stevon Booker, a Soldier who was assigned to the 1st Battalion, 64th Armored Regiment, 2nd Brigade Combat Team 3rd Infantry Division and killed in Iraq in 2003, was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross posthumously 16 years to the day at the Soldiers and Sailors Memorial Hall in Pittsburgh, April 5.

Booker's mother, Freddie Jackson, and his sister, Kim Talley-Armstead, natives of Apollo, Pennsylvania, were presented the award on his behalf by Lt. Gen. Laura J. Richardson, the deputy commanding general of U.S. Army Forces Command.

"This is the nation's second highest award for valor," said Richardson. "For the 3rd Infantry Division, they are so proud to have Steve be presented this award."

Booker was originally awarded the Silver Star for his actions during the now famed Thunder Run, an armored strike into Baghdad on April 5, 2003, led by the "Wild Bunch," Company A of Task Force 1-64, which eventually resulted in the collapse of the Saddam Hussein government.

"There were originally 26 Silver Stars awarded to the Spartan Brigade, the brigade Steve was in," said Richardson. "He is the only Soldier in that brigade that will receive the Distinguished Service Cross for his actions."

During the raid, Booker's platoon came under heavy small-arms and rocket-propelled grenade fire. Booker immediately reacted – communicated the situation to his chain-of-command, returned fire with his mounted machine-gun and reassured his crew that they would make it to their objective.

When his crew's machine-gun malfunctioned, Booker completely disregarded his personal safety and took up an exposed prone position on the top of his tank. While still engaged by heavy enemy fire, Booker maintained communication with his platoon, accurately destroyed an enemy vehicle and effectively protected his platoon's flank.

For Jackson, her son's death cuts just as deep today as it did in 2003. However, she knows his death is not in vain.

"I didn't realize how much my son did and how he inspired other people," said Jackson. "Steve died for his country, not just for the Booker Family."

Following the completion of a year-long military decorations and awards review, former Secretary of Defense Ash Carter directed a comprehensive review of all Silver Stars and Distinguished Service Cross awards issued during Operation Iraqi Freedom.

After giving careful consideration, it was determined that Booker be awarded the Army Distinguished Service Cross.

In addition to the actual DSC presentation, a social was held the night prior for Booker's Family and Thunder Run veterans of his former unit.

For many of the TF 1-64 veterans, this was the first time they had seen each other since returning home from that deployment in 2003.

Col. Andrew Hilmes, the deputy commander of maneuver for the Marne Division, was Booker's company commander during Thunder Run. He vividly remembers the day Booker was killed and his intrepid and selfless actions that day over 16 years ago and the monumental impact Booker left behind him.

"Staff Sgt. Booker served 16 years in the Army," said Hilmes. "He was what we call an 'old school' noncommissioned officer. Just a real professional, driven NCO whose ability to train his Soldiers saved a lot of lives. Not just his actions on the 5th of April, but the training that he put his Soldiers through, paid off in spades for the unit."

Breaking out of rank and file during Provider Stakes

Sgt. Elizabeth White
3IDSB Public Affairs

You can find them at the front or back of physical training formations, sitting in meetings or in their offices before everyone comes to work and long after everyone goes home. It's not often that commanders or a first sergeants get to break out of their daily grind, but when the opportunity presents itself to take on intense field training, they jump in with both feet.

Provider Stakes is a yearly event for 3rd Infantry Division Sustainment Brigade command teams to foster esprit de corps through competition as well as refresh their basic Soldier skills such as land navigation and marksmanship.

"I think it was great motivation to get all the command teams together, we don't really get to see each other at that level," said Capt. Michelle Liggitt, the Bravo Detachment Commander, 24th Financial Management Support Unit, Special Troops Battalion, 3rd IDSB. "We see each other in meetings or in passing but getting out to the field and doing these challenges pushed us to work in different groups and get to know each other."

The two-day event began early on an unseasonably cold April morning with the Army Combat Fitness Test. After two-hours of muscle-failure inducing workouts, the Sustainment Brigade "Providers" kept rolling into events that would last until late night and early into the next morning.

"They started out with the ACFT, went to a stress shoot, sling load class, flight to the land navigation sight, day and night land navigation and finished with a 12 mile ruck march," said Sgt. Maj. Jon Noyes, the operations sergeant major with the brigade.

The competition also gave these leaders a chance to work together towards a common goal and learn more about the people they work alongside each day.

"You get to meet them more personally and learn each other's strengths and weaknesses," said Liggitt. "When you're going to these meetings you hear the stats and their readiness, the basic black-and-white picture, you don't actually get to see who they are as a Soldier, a leader or a person."

Fort Stewart and Hunter Army Air Field win top installation honors for 2019

Assistant Chief of Staff for Installation Management

WASHINGTON -- Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Mark A. Milley has selected U.S. Army Garrison Fort Stewart and Hunter Army Airfield, as the gold winner in the 2019 Army Communities of Excellence competition for Regular Army installations.

Taking top honors as the Army National Guard gold winner is the Wisconsin National Guard. The Army Reserve gold winner is the 88th Readiness Division, Fort McCoy, Wisconsin.

Army announced ACOE winners March 26.

This is the seventh time that Fort Stewart and Hunter Army Airfield has won the Army Communities of Excellence top prize. Fort Stewart and Hunter Army Airfield won gold in 2004, 2005, 2006, 2009, 2012 and 2015. The installation received a bronze award in 2018.

Also winning in the Army Communities of Excellence competition in the Regular Army installation category are USAG Fort Wainwright, Alaska; silver; USAG Fort McCoy and USAG Fort Riley, Kansas, bronze; USAG Fort A.P. Hill, Virginia, and USAG Fort Drum, New York, honorable mention.

Winning silver for the Army National Guard is the Louisiana National Guard. The Illinois National Guard won bronze. Receiving honorable mention is the North Carolina National Guard.

The 1st Mission Support Command, Fort Buchanan, Puerto Rico, is the silver winner in the Army Reserve category. The 416th Theater Engineer Command, Darien, Illinois, received honorable mention.

Fort Stewart and Hunter Army Airfield will represent the Army in competition with other military services for the Department of Defense Commander in Chief's Annual Award for Installation Excellence, which recognizes outstanding efforts in the operations and maintenance of U.S. military installations.

Effective with the 2019 ACOE Award winners, leaders will conduct local ceremonies instead of conducting a ceremony in the Pentagon. Local award ceremonies include broader participation and recognition of those who contributed to the excellence of the installation.

The Army Communities of Excellence program recognizes performance excellence in installation management. The program highlights continuous business process improvement, individual innovation, groundbreaking initiatives, and dedication to efficiency, effectiveness and customer care. These efforts directly affect the quality of support to Soldiers, families, civilian employees and retirees on Army installations.

The ACOE program uses the Malcolm Baldrige National Quality Program Criteria for Performance Excellence -- an internationally recognized integrated management system -- to evaluate the competing installations. The criteria are the basis for performance excellence recognition programs worldwide and in federal agencies including the U.S. Army, the Department of Veterans Affairs and the U.S. Coast Guard. Participants are judged against this common standard and not against each other.

The ACOE program supports reform by using a holistic approach emphasizing the alignment of business operations using an Integrated Management System. The system is tailored for today's Army installations to enhance efficiencies, innovation, sustainability and continuous process improvement in providing community members excellent services and facilities in a quality environment.

Fishing survey forecasts fun

Rachael Rourke
DPW Environmental Fisheries Biologist

Spring is officially here and sports enthusiasts are putting away their firearms and breaking out their fishing tackle.

This past fall, the Fort Stewart-Hunter Army Airfield Fish and Wildlife Branch collected information on the fish populations in managed recreational fishing ponds.

Data was collected from anglers via the iSportsman program and the annual fall electrofishing population sample. The information indicates a great year for fishing on the installation.

Just like hook-and-line fishing, electrofishing provides a small indication of the overall health of fish populations. During the process, fish are netted, weighed, measured, and then released back into the pond they came from.

The fall 2018 population survey had some expected results and one large surprise – really big fish.

If you are looking to catch large numbers of largemouth bass, check out ponds 1, 21, 29, 32, and 35. All of these ponds contained large numbers of this hard-fighting fish species. If you tend to target trophy bass, you should plan to fish in ponds 2, 19, 21, 28, and 35. The fall electrofishing survey showed many large-mouths that exceeded five pounds - with a few fish pushing 9 pounds. Ponds 19 and 28 having the highest numbers of bass over 5 pounds.

For those looking for a nice mess of sunfish to take home, ponds 1, 17, 21, and 26 look very promising according to electrofishing results. These ponds not only had lots of pan fish, but some big ones, too. Bluegill were over nine inches and redear sunfish over 10 inches long. The largest bluegill encountered was from Pond 26 and was more than 10 inches long. Pond 1 had the largest redear at nearly 11 inches long, weighing more than a pound.

Crappie are typically found in deeper, more open water than electrofishing can effectively sample; but a few sometimes venture into shallow water and are captured during sampling. Crappie were found in ponds 1, 2, 3, 26, and 28. Some of the larger crappie surveyed were more than 11 inches long and weighed about a pound.

The biggest surprise during the entire fall 2018 fish population electrofishing survey was a 23-inch long, 6.93 pound hybrid striped bass. Hybrid striped bass have not been intentionally stocked in any installation pond in more than a decade. This fish was likely mixed in with other fish stocked from the Richmond Hill hatchery. It is possible that others are present, but the odds are low. Instead of ruining the surprise for everyone, it will just be said that this prize was found in a pond that is rarely closed.

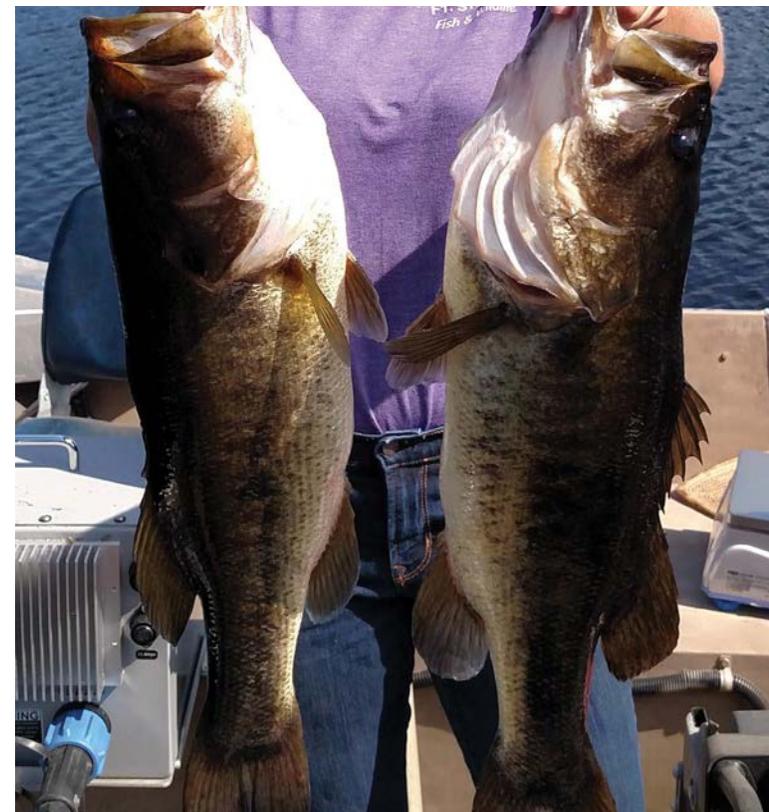

The iSportsman data adds another piece to the puzzle of the fish population. This data reveals fishing pressure as well as fish harvest at each pond. A variety of data was collected through iSportsman, including number of check-ins and number of fish caught.

For largemouth bass, anglers reported the total number of bass caught, plus the number of bass kept and the lengths and weights for up to five bass. For other fish species, only the total number of each species are reported.

Anglers reported catching bass measuring 20 inches long in 16 of the 20 managed ponds. There were reports of bass longer than 24 inches being caught in ponds 3, 26, 28, 29, and 32. Some weighing more than 10 pounds. Pond 1 had the most bass reported, with more bass being reported than there were number of check-ins for the pond.

Anglers reported catching the most bluegill sunfish, catfish, crappie, and redbreast sunfish in Pond 3. The high number of bluegill were reported in ponds 1, 19, and 30. Ponds 24 and 30 also had high numbers of catfish. The ponds with the most crappie reports were Ponds 1, 28, 30, and 33.

Remember, to fish on Fort Stewart-Hunter Army Airfield, a Georgia state fishing license and installation iSportsman fishing or combo permit is required. For more information on fishing or hunting on the installation, purchase permits, or check into areas - check out the Fort Stewart-Hunter Army Airfield iSportsman website <https://ftstewart.isportsman.net>.

Spring Cemetery Tour recalls area history

Dina McKain
Fort Stewart Public Affairs

The Fort Stewart Cemetery and Historical Communities Council hosted the installation's spring cemetery tour, April 4.

Nearly fifty participants visited five of the installation's sixty cemeteries, with stops at Cypress Slash, Trinity, Parker-Sapp, Todds, Bragg, and Dreggars cemeteries.

Some of the attendees lived on the land before the government turned it into a military installation. The land on Fort Stewart was purchased by Congress in 1940 to build an anti-aircraft training facility in preparation for World War II.

The Fort Stewart-Hunter Army Airfield garrison commander, Col. Jason Wolter and the garrison senior enlisted leader, Command Sgt. Maj. Rebecca Myers, greeted participants and thanked the former residents and their descendants for their continued support of Soldiers and their Families.

Pat Young, a public affairs representative and history enthusiast, noted while narrating the tour - while the mission has changed on Fort Stewart, the area has always been home to heroes. He pointed out individuals who have been living in the areas since the creation of Fort Argyle in 1736 - built to help protect the fledgling town of Savannah.

Cultural historian and archaeologist, Brian Greer, from the Fort Stewart Directorate of Public Works Environmental Division provided detail information regarding each of the stops and background for many of the families who lived in the area.

Larry Carlisle, Fort Stewart Fish and Wildlife, was also on-hand to brief community members regarding the land/wildlife management on the installation. He said several threatened species benefited from the installation programs such as the red cockaded woodpecker, gopher tortoise and the eastern indigo snake.

Fort Stewart holds two cemetery tours a year on behalf of the Cemetery and Historical Communities Council in April and November. Follow the Fort Stewart-Hunter Army Airfield Facebook page for information on the next event at <https://www.facebook.com/FortStewartHunterArmyAirfield/>

3rd ID hosts enlisted sustainment conference

Staff Sgt. Quanesha Barnett
3rd ID Public Affairs

The 3rd Infantry Division logistics hosted an enlisted sustainment conference at Club Stewart on Fort Stewart, April 5.

The purpose of the conference was to empower all senior sustainment leaders with necessary tools, guidance and mentorship to develop and strengthen their unit's programs.

The conference started with Sgt. Maj. Patricio Cardonevega, 3rd ID logistics sergeant major, opening up with key messages and communication goals. The topics of discussion were division transportation, supply and services, food service and maintenance.

They also provided division policy and guidance on material maintenance.

One of the goals was the command's general sustainment priorities on how the division would meet its goal on Fort Stewart. Cardonevega shared valuable lessons learned that can educate noncommissioned officers to better assist commanders with daily sustainment operations.

The conference continued with supply and services topics that were comprised of multiple subsection that asset visibility, food service, contracting, mortuary affairs and material management.

The objectives covered were operation clean sweep, Marne standard operator procedure handbook for the company-level leaderships and unit supply personnel on how to improve area across the division.

Additionally, the conference was held to help noncommissioned officers understand what enlisted responsibilities are in different functions of their career fields.

The last speaker at the conference was the Combined Arms Support Command senior enlisted leader, Command Sgt. Maj. Michael J. Perry III. Perry explained how to better train future Dogface Soldiers as they arrive to their units. He also discussed the changes they are making in logistics with transportation, food service, supply and other logistic military occupational specialties.

"Noncommissioned officers, you are the backbone of the Army," said Perry. "Learn the handbook and have your Soldiers learn it as well because it can set you up for success."

The conference ended with Cardona's remarks about Marne initiatives and concerns on Fort Stewart.

"Senior leaders have to make this Army right," said Cardona. "It starts with us so let's read the SOP."

Army to field new night vision goggles

Joe Lacdan
Army News Service

WASHINGTON -- A more advanced binocular night-vision goggle will soon be coming to the Army's ranks.

For the past nine months, the service has been testing the Enhanced Night Vision Goggle-Binocular, or ENVG-B, and taking input from Soldiers. Plans call for fielding the device in October to an armored brigade combat team that will deploy to South Korea, said Lt. Gen. James Pasqualette, Army G-8.

Pasqualette and other leaders testified before the Senate Armed Services Committee Tuesday at an Army modernization hearing.

The ENVG-B features a dual-tube structure and uses thermal imaging, he said. It will connect to a Soldier's weapon using the Family of Weapon Sights-Individual and Rapid Target Acquisition Capability. The combined technology will allow Soldiers to detect targets through smoke and spot enemies behind light obscurants.

"It is definitely a winner," said Lt. Gen. James Richardson, deputy commander of Army Futures Command. "I have used the goggle. I have shot [with] the goggle. It is better than anything I've experienced in my Army career."

The goggles have been tested with Army Rangers and infantry Soldiers and proven successful. In addition to advancing to a binocular system rather than monocular, Soldiers will no longer see the green tint of the current night vision goggles, which uses green phosphorous tubes. The ENVG-B uses white phosphorous tubes. The binocular system also provides more depth perception than the traditional monocular sight.

"It's been so successful with our Rangers and our infantry, that they've been using this night vision goggle in the daytime on the ranges," Richardson said. "And they've gone from marksman to expert. It was more than we thought it was going to be from a night perspective."

Chief Warrant Officer 2 Colin Loveless, a pilot with 3rd Battalion, 126th Aviation Regiment, Maine Army National Guard, tests his night vision goggles for nighttime operations in Bangor, Maine. The Army will field a new night vision goggle, called the Enhanced Night Vision Goggle-Binocular, or ENVG-B, in October.

TRICARE covers banked donor milk for sick infants

Special to the Frontline

TRICARE now covers prescribed banked donor milk for infants with certain serious health conditions. Your baby and you must meet certain criteria for TRICARE to cover banked donor milk.

Covered banked donor milk comes from human milk banks accredited by the Human Milk Banking Association of North America. These accredited milk banks are only available in the U.S. and Canada. HMBANA issues safety guidelines on processing human donor milk for member banks. TRICARE won't pay for milk you get from non-HMBANA accredited banks.

Donor milk may be covered for serious health conditions:

- Born at a very low birth weight
- A disorder or surgery where the baby's digestive needs require additional support
- Diagnosed with failure-to-thrive (not appropriately gaining weight or growing)
- Unable to drink formula and the baby's having difficulty eating or has weight loss

- Low blood sugar
- Heart disease
- An organ transplant
- Other serious health conditions when the use of banked donor milk is medically necessary. To be medically necessary means it is appropriate, reasonable, and adequate for your condition and the treatment and recovery of the infant.

If your baby has any of these conditions and your own milk isn't available or isn't good enough in quantity or quality to meet your baby's needs, then you may be eligible for banked donor milk. TRICARE may also cover banked donor milk in cases where the birth mother is unavailable and the baby has a serious health condition. This could be due to adoption, deployment of the mother, or maternal death.

A TRICARE-authorized provider must prescribe the banked donor milk. A new prescription is required every 30 days, and your baby's doctor must actively manage your baby's treatment with banked donor milk. You can only get up to 35 ounces per day, per baby. Coverage may be for up to 12 months of age, as long as it's medically necessary.

TRICARE has a maximum allowable charge to cover donor milk screening and processing charges. In some situations, you may be required to pay for the milk upfront and later submit a claim to TRICARE.

Learn more about the program and associated costs, by contacting your TRICARE regional contractor.

CHAPLAIN'S CORNER

A lesson from Pontius Pilate

Maj. John Hubbs

Plans and operations chaplain

"So Pilate, wishing to satisfy the crowd, released Barabbas, and having scourged Jesus, he delivered him to be crucified."
Mark 15:15.

What is the worst decision you ever made? Now, try to imagine that this decision was the only thing anyone remembered about you. That little mental exercise will help you sympathize with Pontius Pilate. Historically, all we know about him is that he was the Prefect of Judea from about 26-36 A.D., that he governed during a period in which tensions were high among a group of people who very much resented Roman occupation, and that sometime in the middle of his term in office he was called upon to make a key decision regarding a controversial religious figure.

The picture painted in the gospels regarding Pilate is that he was a man facing a moral dilemma. On the one hand, he was personally convinced that Jesus posed no threat to Rome as a revolutionary. On the other hand he feared the influence of the highest ranking religious leaders who did see Jesus as a threat. Pilate had recently offended the religious sensitivities of those whom he governed, and he no doubt realized that the leaders of the temple could easily incite a rebellion. Pilate must also have known that if Rome lost confidence in his capacity to keep the peace, he was out. Hence, Pilate's dilemma was simply this: act justly, or preserve his own career. He chose the latter.

Personal Courage is one of the Army's core values. On the battlefield it might involve the willingness to risk one's life for the mission or for a battle buddy. We honor those who display it the most with medals. However, personal courage is also put to the test off the battlefield in situations involving dilemmas such as Pilate's. There are times when doing what one's conscience says is morally right stands in opposition to that which might be beneficial for one's career.

These are the times when we need to think beyond just the next evaluation report or promotion board. We need to try to see things from God's eternal perspective. Maybe a good question to ask ourselves is, "What would I do if I knew my decision in this situation were to become my lasting legacy?" I saw an article recently in which someone proposed awarding medals for acting courageously in these type of situations. I doubt if that ever happens. The reward for personal courage needs to be seen in what you won't have - a guilty conscience. In Pilate's case he would have avoided being remembered negatively by millions of Christians every time they recite the Apostle's or Nicene Creed: "Suffered under Pontius Pilate." That's 2000 years of infamy for what turned out to be just a few more years on the job --so much for satisfying the crowd.

Army 'Shark Tank' enabling quick prototyping of new systems

Gary Sheftick
Army News Service

WASHINGTON -- The Army Futures Command is working with industry to enable "quick prototyping" of new systems that will modernize the force, Secretary of the Army Mark T. Esper told lawmakers Tuesday.

"We've been able to bring folks in for our version of the Shark Tank, if you will," Esper told members of the House Armed Services Committee during its hearing on the posture of the Army and Air Force.

Esper was referring to a review of the Army's programs by senior leaders at the Pentagon, with participation from cross-functional teams of the Army Futures Command.

The CFTs mix a slice of the Army's acquisition corps with program managers and private-sector experts to speed up the modernization process.

Industry representatives who pitch a viable idea to a CFT are connected to the Army's requirements developers, Esper said, and the program is then put on a fast track.

The Army's six modernization priorities now have 30 embedded programs, Army Chief of Staff Gen. Mark A. Milley testified at the hearing.

For instance, the Next-Generation Combat Vehicle is one of the Army's six priorities and one of the programs embedded under it is the Optionally Manned Vehicle. The Army released a request for proposal, or RFP, for the vehicle March 29.

Maturing Technologies

"The technologies have advanced to a level where we have confidence," Milley said of the Optionally Manned Vehicle.

"Second, we are doing a lot of experimenting and prototyping," he said. He explained the process is "fundamentally different" than what happened with the Future Combat Systems under development a decade ago.

"With FCS, we got out in front of our headlights, in the sense that we were trying to demand a requirement in a vehicle for which the technology wasn't mature," he said.

"We know factually that optionally-manned or robotic vehicles work today -- they're working in the commercial world, they're driving and delivering goods and services up and down the highways and byways of America, even as we speak."

Milley said driving on the highways is a little different than driving in the terrain downrange where the Army maneuvers, so some research and development still needs to be done and some challenges still need to be overcome.

The Army, though, is very confident that the vehicles which "will come off the production line in the not-too-distant future will have great capability to be optionally manned," he said.

Active protection systems is another technology that the Army is developing and plans to use on all of its armored vehicles, Milley said. APS is a system of sensors and directed energy that would counter missiles or incoming rounds.

Equipping four brigade combat teams with APS is an interim measure or "waypoint," he said, until the entire armored force could be equipped.

Networking

The selection of Austin, Texas, as headquarters for the Army Futures Command gets the Army's research and development community out from behind gates, Esper said, and allows them to interact with industry and academia as Austin is home to the University of Texas system.

"We're not behind walls or barbed wire,"

Esper said. "We're actually out in the community. We're working with young entrepreneurs and innovators and we're also reaching out to academia there and in other places."

An Artificial Intelligence Task Force was established a couple of months ago in partnership with Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh, Esper said. He said more than a dozen companies have expressed interest in the task force, along with other institutions of higher learning.

3rd ID supports 48th IBCT National Guard

Georgia National Guard Soldiers from the 48th Infantry Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division, conducted a maintenance and upgrade event for their satellite communication systems on Fort Stewart, April 3.

The 3rd ID supports the 48th IBCT rear detachment with their static equipment before the forward units return home from deployment. The bulk of the 48th IBCT was deployed to Afghanistan in December 2018.

For the day's event, the Soldiers set up their communications systems and used technical manual procedures to bring them into operation.

After receiving the upgrades, Soldiers navigated the Tactical Local Area Network Encryption to establish network communications.

If the Georgia National Guard had any issues, they called the 3rd ID tech support, who provided 24-hour service.

The also received face-to-face interactions from technicians on how to upgrade and repair the equipment.

"Not only is it about supporting them, but it's also about developing a long term relationship with the Georgia National Guard, so they will know in the future that we are always going to be here to support them with any events," said Sgt. 1st Class David Smith, 3rd ID communications. "When these guys go back to their armories throughout all of Georgia, they should know, when they pick up the phone to call us, they're going to talk to the same people that they've had face-to-face interactions with."

Soldiers from the 48th IBCT expressed their gratitude for the the 3rd ID support.

"At first, I was concerned on how much support we would receive from the 3rd ID," said 1st Lt. Christopher Garner, the 48th IBCT communications officer in charge of the project. "But from day one, they were very helpful. Over the last couple of weeks, we've built a good relationship. We've had a really good experience and hope to continue that in the future."

Sgt. Darius Ford, a communications Soldier with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 148th Brigade Support Battalion, 48th IBCT, said he was impressed with the level of knowledge the Marine Soldiers contributed.

"This wouldn't be possible if we didn't receive help from the 3rd ID," said Ford, applauding the additional training and resources. "They've helped us 24/7 and we really appreciate the 3rd ID."

The Georgia National Guard will complete a month of maintenance and upgrades before returning back to their units.

Spartan Six gives leadership insight

Col. Patrick O'Neal, commander of 2nd Armored Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division, speaks to senior non-commissioned officers of 2ABCT at Fort Stewart, April 2. O'Neal shared his experiences and his philosophies on what it means to be a leader of Soldiers. O'Neal said,

"You need to be where your Soldiers are. There is paperwork to be done, counseling to be done, but if you're not there [with the Soldiers] who's going to be? Be where they're tired, be where it's not safe. You are the leader to those Soldiers in the formation," O'Neal said.
