

Signal soldier wins GSMC NCO of Month being the youngest of eight children, I got a lot of advice. You can learn from their experiences and make better decisions about what course you will follow.

Sergeant Detra Willis of Windham, Mo. also advice came from her brother who wanted to travel and then go to college, but she also wanted to be with her friends.

Her decision to join the Army in 1981 was "perfect," she said. "I was able to be with friends that I had known most of my life. Although I was able to adjust to the military, they weren't and I was there for moral support."

Now that her old friends are gone, she has new responsibilities, that natural flexibility and feelings of empathy learned in basic training have become leadership traits for GSMC's NCO of the Month.

Self-improvement has also become a leadership trait for the Headquarters Company, 51st Signal Battalion.

She's a graduate of both the Primary Leadership Development Course and the

"I try to look out for soldiers, but if they hide their problems or don't come to me, how will I know?"

Sgt. Detra Willis

Basic Non-Commissioned Officer Course. She's been honored as the 51st Signal Battalion's NCO of the Quarter (First Quarter '88) with subsequent selection as the battalion's NCO of the Year. She's also been selected as the 93rd Signal Brigade's NCO of the Quarter (First Quarter '88) and the NCO of the Year.

And although the Sgt. Morales Club selection at battalion level wasn't a success for her, it did teach her a valuable lesson in leadership: determination.

"Being a member of the club is a big thing in our unit," she said. "Many have tried and very few have been selected. It isn't so much the recognition, privilege, or promotion points; it's the tremendous sense of accomplishment."

"It's a personal thing now."

Although she's a tactical satellite microwave systems operator, her new duty as Personnel Actions Center supervisor puts her in routine contact with lots of soldiers.

As an NCO, knowing the soldiers she supervises or just dealing with other soldiers is a skill very important to Willis. She's been "challenged physically" and has met the academic requirements, but what she wants most isn't found on a page or in a training environment.

She wants to be a leader in a practical sense. She wants to influence and mobilize others regardless of the mission or goal.

Willis wants to know "what to do if ..."

"I try to look out for soldiers," she said. "But if they hide their problems or don't come to me, how will I know? Soldiers frequently assume you can merely look at them and know."

She remembers her first serious encounter.

"I knew a soldier once who worked for me who had a problem," she said, "and I offered to help. The soldier was reluctant and went to someone else."

"I felt bad and I don't ever want to feel that way again."

"I want to exchange ideas with other NCOs either through NCO Professional Development Classes or one on one as to how to deal with these kinds of concerns."

Willis and subsequent NCOs of the Month receive a plaque from the Service Federal Credit Union, a $50 savings bond from the community bank and a gift certificate package from the Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES).

Monthly selections are made on unit recommendation received by GSMC CSM Glen A. Harlow. Nominations may be submitted through command channels to GSMC HQ by the 15th of each month.

Correction

A story in the July 10 issue of the Citizen, page 3, titled, "HIV-1 positive rate declining in military," contained an error in fact.

The article stated, "Between 600 and 700 AIDS patients are treated per month at 5th General Hospital." It should have said close to 1,000 persons are tested for the HIV-1 virus. This service is performed by 5th General Hospital as part of the requirement for all military members to be tested annually for the HIV-1 virus.

Year of the NCO

Good leaders give up ownership, instill pride

Ownership is a problem. It means doing the things leaders do; things that scare managers.

Ownership means trusting your subordinates and taking the hits for their mistakes, it means not giving in to pressure from above, it means giving up a lot of the power without giving up the responsibility.

The commander who asks, "You're on top of this, aren't you?", implies soldiers aren't competent to do a task unless they're micro-managed.

The NCO whose favorite story is the one about the soldiers who, given the opportunity, painted his room black, implies that soldiers, although well-meaning, lack judgement.

Creating a paperwork chain of responsibility so complicated that it takes a lawyer to understand is not only intimidating to the mere mortal, it does little for the betterment of the office.

For the leader who is willing to fight this anti-ownership system, the rewards are great. You'll find out which of your people are dependable when unsupervised and what each subordinate is good at, so you can assign the right person to each task.

Your incompetent people won't be able to hide. You can correct their problems and start training them before they become serious work and morale problems and you'll have more time for things which really require your personal attention.

When your people start to excel regularly, you'll look good despite the bumpy ride getting this far. Getting ownership started is easy, keeping it up is a full-time job, the pressure is often against you. Setting the ownership example is all-important.

For example, Gen. Moemdown just walked in and asked for a driver and truck right now. There are three licensed drivers sitting in the office, what do you do?

The easiest thing would be to give the keys to one of the other drivers and make the general instantly happy. But if you do toss the keys to someone else, remember that from then on all your trucks will receive only the minimum care required, unless you're out there riding the troops.

If you're setting the ownership example, you'll call

Smith and ask him if he doesn't have an absolute life-or-death crisis, could he please give Gen. Moemdown "his" truck for the day.

Unless Smith has leadership problems or has really lost touch with reality, he'll say yes. Then he's going to announce to everyone how you asked him permission to use "his" truck.

How well do you think Smith is going to take care of "his" truck from then on? How about the other soldiers under you who will all hear about the incident? How will they respond?

About a year and a half ago, I saw a letter to the editor in a military magazine. The writer told how they'd been impressed by something they'd seen on the flight line of an airbase while watching a jet take off.

The mechanic who'd been working on the jet came to attention and saluted the pilots as they started the engines, then she walked over and pressed her hand against the wing of the plane before it began to roll.

That's pride in your work, that's the feeling of ownership. Nothing works quite like it. (ArNews)

Setting good example utmost legacy

What will you leave behind?

by Wendell G. Small, Jr.
GSMC Director of Religious Ed.

The infamous Roman emperor, Nero, was not only into music — remember, he fiddled while Rome burned? — but also he was into sports. During the 1984 Olympics, a California firm published a booklet with some little-known facts about the Games. Here is one of the most interesting: "In 67 A.D., the Roman emperor Nero entered the Olympics as a contestant. He weighed approximately 360 pounds and was accompanied by 5,000 attendants whose only job was to applaud him. He entered the chariot race. During the race, he fell off his chariot and had to be helped back on. And despite the fact that he couldn't even finish the race, the judges unanimously declared him the winner."

Such incidents confirm Nero's place in history as a rogue whom no person of character would want to emulate. As one writer wrote, after contrasting the lives of the Apostle Paul and Nero (who lived about the same time), "We call our sons Paul and our dogs Nero."

Every person leaves behind some kind of spiritual legacy . . . good, bad, or a little of both. Elijah, whose life was so spiritually rich, passed on his spiritual legacy to Elisha who succeeded him as a prophet of Israel.

When Elijah was on his death bed, he asked Elisha what he could do for him before he was taken from him. "And Elisha said, 'I pray you, let me inherit a double share of your spirit'" (2 Kings 2:9)

What a flattering request that must have been for Elijah, that someone close enough to him to know him well, would want to be not only like him, but doubly so. Who could ask for anything more than for someone to want to be doubly like you?

Elisha seemed to have gotten that double share of Elijah's spirit. His ministry to Israel lasted half a century and he had such wisdom and popularity that kings sought his counsel. We all need models to pattern our lives after and fortunate are the children and youth who find an exemplar they want to be like. It is the ultimate legacy, as well, for an adult to learn that someone wants to be like him or her. Some parents, teachers, clergy, employers, community leaders have known such a warm reward and heard the words: "I want to be just like you." While everyone might want to leave behind such a spiritual legacy, yet many have such spiritually impoverished lives that all they can leave is material wealth: money, a stock portfolio, property or a business. And many, of course, can't even leave that. What more painful words can be heard or uttered than: "I don't want to be anything like my dad/mom!" Conversely what more glorious words than the final ones Elijah heard from Elisha: "I pray you, let me inherit a double share of your spirit!"

Servicemembers possess rights not found in civilian courts

"Soldiers, sailors, airmen, and Marines have perhaps more rights when suspected of an offense than civilians," said Lt. Col. Steve Smith, deputy chief, Criminal Law Division, Department of the Army Judge Advocate General.

"For example," said Smith, "if a commander has heard that a soldier has written a bad check and wants to question him about it, he has to advise the troop of the nature of the offense, the right to remain silent, the right to appointed counsel free of charge, and the right to hire his own counsel at no cost to the government before he asks him anything. A civilian does not have to be advised of his rights, known as the Miranda rule, until he is actually in police custody."

Not only does a servicemember have the right to free counsel from the beginning, but in most services, the appointed lawyer is from another organization to ensure independence. A further protection comes from the requirement that during most military trials, a verbatim record must be kept. This record will be reviewed in its entirety should the case go to a higher court. In civilian cases, the verbatim record is prepared only for those points identified as having a possible error.

Servicemembers' broad rights continue after a judgement has been rendered. In 1950, Congress established the Uniform Code of Military Justice to ensure a fair system. Under this code, a Court of Military Review must review the record for each case of trial by court-martial in which the sentence was death, dismissal, dishonorable or bad-conduct discharge, or confinement for one year or more, unless the right to appellate review cannot be waived if the sentence extends to death.

The Court of Military Review looks at the complete record of the trial for both matters of law and fact, said Smith. "Matters of law are what lay persons would refer to as technicalities," said Smith. "For example, if the accused did not have his or her rights read before questioning, that would be a violation of a matter of law."

"Matters of fact are actual matters of guilt or innocence," said Smith. "The court weighs the evidence, judges the credibility of the witnesses, and looks at the arguments from both sides of the case to see whether it can affirm — agree with — the outcome of the case."

No member of the Court of Military Review can review a case if he or she was involved in anyway with the original trial. Smith said this provides one more layer of protection for military defendant's advocate. "Military review lawyers can, and do, find that the original lawyer did not do the most competent job possible."

In contrast, a civilian is frequently represented by the same lawyer as the case goes higher. A lawyer is not likely to argue that he did not do a good job in the earlier trial," said Smith.

The judges on the Court of Military Review are senior military officers — at least O-5s. Even if the Court of Military Review affirms the verdict and sentence for a capital case, one involving a death sentence, the United States Court of Military Appeals, whose judges are civilians, must review the case.

"Civilian review at the highest level provides a further guarantee of the fairness within the military justice system," said Smith. (AFIS)

Over-the-counter drug sales increase

The Army and Air Force Exchange Service report that sales of over-the-counter medicines have increased dramatically over the past decade.

Americans use over-the-counter remedies for a wide variety of ailments — from antihistamines for hay fever to first-aid sprays for cuts. In fact, six out of 10 medications in our homes were bought without a prescription. We treat four times as many common health problems with non-prescription drugs as we take to a physician.

Far from being alarmed by this trend, Food and Drug Administration Commissioner Dr. Frank E. Young, a rear admiral in the Commissioned Corps of the U.S. Public Health Service, sees it as a positive sign of the willingness of Americans to take responsibility for their health.

But military and public health officials stress the importance of responsible use of over-the-counter health products. Young has written on the subject.

The difference between prescriptions and non-prescription drugs is spelled out in the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act. It says that drugs which are habit-forming or unsafe for use, except under a doctor's supervision, can be dispensed without a prescription. Drugs are generally considered safe for the consumer to use by following the required label directions and warnings are available over the counter.

According to Young, "Over-the-counter drugs not only relieve symptoms; some can even cure an illness, such as antihelmintics used to kill pinworms." Even insulin for diabetics is available without a prescription.

In 1972, the Food and Drug Administration began taking a hard look to see which prescription medicines could be safely made available without prescription and which non-prescription drugs were unsafe.

As a result of the review, it was found that the use of non-prescription medicines may have saved Americans $10.5 billion in 1987 alone — based primarily on less time lost from work and money spent on doctor visits, as well as the greater cost of prescription drugs.

But for all over-the-counter products, Young warned, it is important to read the warnings and follow the instructions on the label.

Some of the most common warnings include the following:

● "Do not drive or operate heavy machinery while taking this product."

● "If you are pregnant or nursing a baby, seek the advice of a health professional before using this product."

● "If symptoms persist for more than 10 days, consult a physician."

● "Do not drink alcoholic beverages while taking this product."

Experts predict American spending for non-prescriptive drugs will grow from $8.6 billion in 1986 to as much as $23 billion in 1995.

updates

German rental law

In most cases in Germany, the rent for an apartment or house is due on the landlord's account by the third working day of the month. "On the landlord's account" means the payment is posted at the landlord's bank in his account, not that it is paid at the Bundespost. If you are late with your rent, the landlord would have little trouble evicting under German law. Therefore, pay your rent in plenty of time to insure it is posted by the third.

If you pay the landlord directly, be sure to get a receipt. Under German law, the tenant must show that he/she paid the rent. If you have no proof of payment, you could be evicted.

Lastly, if you have an agreement with your landlord about your rent, get it in writing. For example, if your landlord allows you to pay twice a month, instead of one lump payment, be sure that you have that agreement in writing.

Blackmarket blues

Ever wonder why sometimes there are shortages in the commissary? Why do good things in the PX disappear so quickly? "One reason is that some selfish military members and dependents sell commissary and PX goods to local nationals," said Staff Sgt. Thomas Mumford or 42nd MP Group's investigations section. "That's blackmarketing and totally unlawful," he added.

All items in U.S. forces stores in Germany are exempt from German duty and tax. "The German government gives us this privilege," Mumford explained, "to make our stay in Germany easier. But when the blackmarketeer sells to local nationals, he robs the German government of revenue. The Germans could start making us pay tax and duty one day if they lose too much money."

You can easily prevent this by reporting blackmarketing to your local 42nd MP Group customs office.

Volksmarching

A hiking high for nature lovers

Stuttgart Citizen staff

Volksmarching is a sport, sightseeing trip, weekend excursion, and exercise program all rolled into one. "March of the people" participants work out, meet people, and groove on nature simultaneously. In short, it's not just a sport, it's an experience.

"You get to see different areas, great scenery, and when you're done — you get a prize," said Rebecca Dioda, program director for the Outdoor Recreation Branch at Robinson Barracks.

Dioda is an enthusiast. She's completed over 50 marches during the last 18 months and is nearing the magic 1,000 kilometer (600 mile) mark. That accomplishment will earn her a medal along with much personal satisfaction.

"A bad knee prevents me from jogging so volksmarching is ideal. I can walk well," Dioda confided. But exercise is not the only benefit of volksmarching.

Dioda likes to "bring friends along" on the hikes and says that marches are places where Americans can "always meet a lot of Germans." Additionally, she enjoys marching with her fiancé. "We talk and it's our time together," she said.

Although volksmarches are "extremely popular in this area," not many soldiers take part, she said. They're missing a good deal.

Basically, a person signs up for a volksmarch by buying a card for DM 8.50 or DM 2. The more expensive card entitles the marcher to a medal for finishing the march, insurance coverage, marked trail, and broth along the way. The cheaper card includes the same benefits without the medal. Booklets are used at the beginnings of marches to record the distance covered and whether the marcher completed the march.

Marches vary in length from 10 kilometers (6 miles) to 30 km (18 miles) on up to 42 km (26 miles). Booklets are used to record each hike so the distance over a span of time can be calculated.

Volksmarching trails wind through farm roads, scenic logging routes, small town sidewalks and mountain paths. Marches usually start in small towns and cut through other small villages. They generally last only three or four hours depending, of course, on the length. Death marches, though, involve hikes anywhere from 75 km (45 miles) to 135 km (81 miles). These usually involve a 20 to 24 hour time limit. Occasionally, there are marches which last for a week in which hikers leg it out from hotel to hotel.

If all this sounds like torture, it's not. Food stops, rest areas along marching routes and the scenery are capable of overwhelming even the most jaded hiker. Dioda recalls that a march through Bad Soden was the most beautiful she's been on.

She's met some beautiful people, too.

"You always seem to meet an older German who was here during World War II," she noted. Dioda adds that many older Germans are into marching. Some seen couples in their 80s take to the trails.

Volksmarching started in the mid-1960s when a demand arose from people in middle Europe for sports outside the realm of competition. In 1968, the International Federation of Popular Sports (IVV) was formed by Germany, Switzerland, Liechtenstein, and Austria. IVV licenses the booklets, hiking records, etc. for volksmarches. DVV is the German branch of the organization.

Hiking: where and when

The Stuttgart American Wandering Club exists because there is a need in the greater Stuttgart area for an organization that brings together Germans and Americans who are interested in volksmarching.

Founded in 1972, the club is the first American club to be established in the Federal Republic of Germany. Membership is open to any person of any nationality who desires to belong. The annual membership is estimated at over 1,200 persons.

The Stuttgart American Wandering Club publishes a monthly newsletter which includes contact numbers, information about upcoming club trips, and general information.

The club sponsors trips throughout the year which are reasonably priced and designed to enable members to volksmarch at a location that they might not otherwise be able to reach. Trips also afford opportunities for shopping and sightseeing.

Club membership meetings are conducted on the first Tuesday of every month at 7:30 p.m. in the Robinson Barracks Chapel Annex. Pre-registration for trips is perhaps the greatest benefit of membership as the trip charge is then less expensive.

The Wandering Club is not, of course, the only organization which sponsors volksmarches. Upcoming trips from various sponsors include:

Sinsheim-Reihen, July 22-23, 10-20 km, 6 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Lichenwald-Schurwald, July 22-23, 10-20 km, 6 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Rotfelden, July 22-23, 10-20 km, 6 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.

Hohenhaslach, July 29-30, 10-20 km, 6 a.m. to 1 p.m. & 4 to 7 p.m.

Rudersberg, July 29-30, 11-20 km, 6 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.

Stuttgart-Vaihingen, July 29-30, 10-20-30 km, 6 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Oberdischingen, July 29-30, 10-20-42 km, 6 a.m. to finish depending on distance.

Prospective volksmarchers merely need to show up at the above locations, pay for their ticket, and then they can participate in another German adventure.

Salvador Dalí

Surrealist's life's work comes to Stuttgart museum

Story and photos by Andrea Streeb
Stuttgart Citizen editorial assistant

As a homage to Salvador Dalí's 85th birthday, the exhibition in the Neue Staatsgalerie Stuttgart is the first retrospective of the artist since his death on January 23 of this year.

For the first time since the Baden-Baden exhibition 18 years ago, approximately 350 works from all creative phases in the life of the Catalan artist have been brought together from museums, galleries, and private collections across the world, not only from the European countries of Germany, Holland, Belgium, England, Scotland, Sweden, France, Spain, Italy, and Switzerland, but also from Japan, South America, Canada, and numerous regions of the USA, from New York, Boston, Hartford, and Philadelphia, to Chicago, Milwaukee, Arizona, and California.

Paintings, drawings, sculptures and surrealist objects, such as the "Lobster telephone" and "Mae West lips sofa," as well as clothing and theater designs, and a selection of Dalí's graphic work represent the most comprehensive retrospective to date.

In addition, the exhibition places emphasis on the previously neglected early work, highlighting its range of avant garde qualities and the neoclassical figural works of the so-called "Ana Maria Epoch" (Dalí's sister).

The Stuttgart exhibition includes several of the main works of the 50s, like the New York "Crucifixion," and "Madonna of Port Lligat," Dalí's birthplace.

From the complex cosmologies (study of the universe) of the 60s, the exhibition features for the first time in Germany two 4x5 meter compositions.

Dalí's discovery of stereoscopic painting in the early 70s, in which images can be perceived fully in three-dimensions due to a special system of mirrors, is represented by several double pictures that differ only in their varying view points and changing tonalities.

Rare documents — photos, letters, manifestos, catalogues, and illustrated books — enhance the exhibition, accompanied by a program including Dalí's movies "Un chien andalou," 1929 (an Andalusian dog), and "L'Age d'or," 1950 (the golden age).

Visiting hours during the exhibition are daily from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., Tuesdays and Thursdays from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. Tickets to the exhibition are DM 8. Guided tours are offered on Tuesdays and Thursdays at 3 p.m. and 6:30 p.m. and on Wednesdays and Fridays at 3 p.m. and 4 p.m. Films are shown daily (except Mondays) at noon and 4 p.m.

The Dalí retrospective represents a major event among all the exhibitions appearing in the Neue Staatsgalerie Stuttgart. The building itself is like a monument.

"In a city, it is essential to have landmarks, a city without monuments would be no place at all," stated James Stirling, architect and "designer" of the Neue Staatsgalerie.

"For me, monumentalism is nothing to do with size or style, but entirely with presence."

In fact, seen from outside, the Neue Staatsgalerie hardly looks like a museum, with its S-shaped glass fronts, neon-color tubes winding all along the outer walls, and the modern-type "Fresko", cafe attracts people of all ages.

The Neue Staatsgalerie Stuttgart, located at Konrad-Adenauer-Str. 30, is one of the most significant museums of art in Germany for the art of the 20th century, and enjoys international reputation.

Together with the museum of art in Duesseldorf, it features the largest collection of Picasso works in the Federal Republic of Germany.

Paintings of the German Renaissance, the Italian art school, Dutch art, German Baroque period, Classicism, and Romanticism are represented by their principal works.

Special emphasis is placed on the early Schwaebische Malerei (Swabian art), represented by painters Zeitblom and Ratgeb, and painting of the 19th and 20th century, with artists such as Schick, Baumeister and Schlemmer.

Masterpieces by Renoir, Monet, Cezanne, Gauguin, Liebermann, Slevogt, Corinth, as well as main works of the German expressionism, the Dada-movement, European and American art after 1945 gather in the Neue Staatsgalerie.

Guided tours are offered on Sundays at 11 a.m., Tuesdays at 6:30 p.m., Wednesdays for children at 3 p.m., and on Thursdays for youths ages 14-20 at 6 p.m.

The "Fresko" cafe is open daily (except Mondays) from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and from 7 p.m. to 2 a.m.

The Neue Staatsgalerie Stuttgart is a 5 minute walk from the Hauptbahnhof, or can be reached by buses 40, 42, and 43.

For further details and information on guided tours, special exhibitions and lectures, contact Neue Staatsgalerie Stuttgart, Konrad-Adenauer-Str. 30, 7000 Stuttgart 1, telephone number 0711-212-5050/5108.

Softball Stallions trample Eagles

Stuttgart sweeps Heilbronn

by Lionel R. Green
Stuttgart Citizen sports writer

Stuttgart's Kathy Kittrell dives into homeplate attempting to score, but Heilbronn's Leslie Wright (20) tags her out.

The Greater Stuttgart Military Community Men's and Women's softball teams went on a rampage on July 9 at Krabbenloch Kaserne.

The Men kept up their excellent season under first-year coach, Edward Riddick, staying atop the Western League with an 18-2 record, while the Lady Stallions held onto second place in the West upping their record to 13-4.

In the Men's doubleheader on Sunday, they pounded Heilbronn 19-5 in the first game. In the second game, Stuttgart notched another 14-run victory, 22-8. Impressive statistics for the two games included Ronald Degray who ripped two homeruns and went 8 for 10. Third baseman Calvin Stephens also went 8 for 10, had a homer, and played outstanding on defense. Clifford Williams had a home run and went 7 for 9, and Allen Crumbley went 6 for 8 and had a homer. Pitcher Steve O'Neil played an excellent game defensively also.

Perched atop the Western League with such an impressive record, the Stallions who finished second in the VII Corps Championship last year, should make a strong run for the VII Corps title this year "but we're looking toward the USAREUR," Coach Riddick said.

In the Women's doubleheader on Sunday, they romped passed the Heilbronn Eagles 17-0 in game one. Queenie Martinez slammed a homer and had two singles. Lori Watkins matched Martinez' output with a homer and a pair of singles, also. Marina "Hollywood" Childress ripped a homerun and slapped a single in the Lady Stallions shutout victory.

In the second game of the doubleheader, the Lady Stallions once again showed no mercy stomping Heilbronn, 23-8. Reva Arnold had an outstanding game on offense knocking two homeruns and five RBIs. Dawn Jennings was perfect at the plate with five for five hitting and two RBIs. Pitcher Sandra Seward had an excellent all-around performance, going 4 for 5 and fanning four batters.

With just two games remaining in the regular season, The Lady Stallions are looking at the VII Corps tournament also.

"We've got a good shot," Coach Thomas Cobb said. "I haven't seen the teams in the Eastern League, but we're second in the West and I'm almost positive we can beat the first-place team of Wuerzburg."

Both teams wind up their season at Schweinfurt on Aug. 5 before going to the VII Corps Championships.

fitness center

Are you ready to try on your swimsuit?

by Christine Charles
Certified Jazzercise instructor

Like most people these days, your thoughts are probably turning to sunny summer days, trips to the beach... and those extra pounds you gained this winter that will make your swimsuit a foe rather than a friend. The onset of summer means the onset of fitness-mania for millions of people. After all, no one wants to be left undercover when temperatures rise. But, in the frenzy to shape up, many individuals unintentionally negate their own efforts.

The most frequent mistake is doing too much too soon. Everyone wants immediate results. So, they jump into a program full force and end up injuring themselves.

You can make significant changes by the time swimsuit season arrives. With a good aerobic exercise program, results begin to show in as little as six to eight weeks, but many people don't have the patience to wait even that long. They end up pushing too hard.

All that's really necessary is to exercise aerobically three to four times a week for a period of at least 20 minutes each time. That means jogging, walking, swimming, cycling, rowing, or aerobic dance classes at a low to moderate intensity.

People anxious to lose weight exercise as hard as they can. But, research shows that low to moderate aerobic exercise actually burns more fat!

Here are some tips for getting the most out of your fitness efforts:

Find an aerobic activity that you enjoy.

Even though running may burn more calories per hour than walking, if you don't enjoy it, you won't do it for long. Don't force yourself to pursue a program that promises faster results if that's the only thing that draws you to it.

Get the right equipment. In most activities, appropriate shoes are extremely important for injury prevention. Proper clothing also helps. Fashion aside, the right attire will complement a workout by offering freedom of movement and maintaining proper body temperature.

Vary your exercise program with a low-fat, high-complex carbohydrate diet. Build your menu around lean meats, whole grain breads and cereals, fresh fruits and vegetables, and low or non-fat dairy products.

Now is a great time to start an exercise program. The ultimate goal is to begin a year-round fitness program, and it's easier to start exercising when the weather is nice.

GSMC tennis

The Greater Stuttgart Military Community Tennis Championships held July 5-9 at Kelley and Robinson Barracks had 11 competitors slam their way to VII Corps.

Peter Nell of HHC, VII Corps won in the Men's Junior Vets division. Lance Luftman placed second in the championship tournament. Rick Roche also of HHC, VII Corps took third place, and Ron Stanley rounded out the VII Corps qualifiers.

Nell was the victor despite playing on clay courts for the first time.

"Being a new-comer to the clay-court surface, my strategy was just to do the best I could by keeping the ball in play," Nell said. "It's a different ball game on clay courts as compared to the hard surfaces with footing and bad bounces being the major differences."

In the Men's Open category, Jeff Fitchett of the 651st Medical Company took top honors. Richard Serge of the 307th Military Intelligence Bn. finished in second place. David Joseph placed third and Eugene Crowell of HHC, 93d Signal Bde. finished fourth to make the team.

Monica Mendez of the 511th Military Intelligence Bn. had what it takes to capture the Women's Open title over Doris Timms of the 11th Chemical Company. Debbie Fitchett of 5th General Hospital will also accompany the GSMC women to the VII Corps Championships.

The VII Corps Tennis Championships will be held in Garmisch this week beginning Thursday and lasting through Sunday.
