

NATO: 40 years of peace through deterrence

Headquarters at Patch Barracks is a vital link in the NATO chain.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) has withstood the stress of time as the alliance prepares to celebrate the 40th anniversary of its union on April 4, 1949.

Though some see NATO as the result of a marriage of convenience and not of true affection, the alliance came together as the threat of Soviet expansion became more evident soon after World War II.

The relationship between the United States, Great Britain and the Soviet Union frayed as the U.S. and Great Britain began to reduce their forces and concentrate on the rebuilding of Germany.

The Soviet Union, however, did not follow suit. With the reduction of Western occupation troops and the overwhelming Soviet presence coupled by Soviet political pressure; Albania, Hungary, Rumania, Poland, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and East Germany fell under Soviet political and military control.

Foreseeing a growing Soviet threat, the United States, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Great Britain, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, France and Portugal joined forces and formed the NATO alliance in April, 1949.

NATO's mission: to join forces in a defensive posture to deter the threat of Communism and Soviet expansionism throughout Europe.

The alliance has evolved over the years since its conception in the spring of '49. Greece and Turkey became members in 1951. West Germany followed suit in 1955. And Spain became NATO's latest affiliate in 1982.

Only one country, France in 1966, has withdrawn from NATO's military infra-structure, but still remains as a member of the alliance.

Today, NATO is a player in a much different world than that of its infancy 40 years ago. Europe in a whole has economically recovered from the wounds of World War II and is now strong and moving toward unification.

The Soviet Union — then under the iron first of Josef Stalin — now ruled under the controversial glove of Mikhail Gorbachev's "perestroika" reforms, is attempting to ease the tension between the East and the West.

The United States — then the most powerful country in the world — is now faced with dire economic constraints and deficits.

What direction NATO will take in the '90s is unknown. Changes are inevitable. There is, however, a consensus that the general approach that has been taken over the last 40 years will continue in the future.

As Europe celebrates its longest period of peace in modern history, NATO, though taxed by ever-changing pressures, has proven through time to be the model for future peacekeeping alliances.

What's up, Doc?

Captain Stacy Ellison examines dental x-rays of patient PFC David Schlafer while Sgt. Kevin Spencer logs the information. Sixty soldiers and 11 dentists from dental units throughout southern Germany participated in a three-day field exercise near Panzer Kaserne in Boeblingen. It was designed as a prototype for a quarterly program of care for soldiers in the field. Officials hope that it will reduce the number of dental problems that become emergencies. Of all medical evacuations from the field, approximately 30 percent are dental emergencies. Of the approximately 500 soldiers examined during the exercise, 30 were MEDEVACed to 5th General Army Hospital Dental Clinic in Bad Canstatt.

Military children are the future of the Army

The Month of the Military Child is celebrated throughout the Armed Forces during April. This special month provides us with an opportunity to recognize the particular needs of children within military families. Life for the military child, especially overseas, is quite different from his civilian counterpart.

As soldiers, we deal every day with the extra responsibilities and privileges which come from being part of the Army. These circumstances also affect life at home with our partners and children.

Military children are expected to adapt to a totally new environment every two or three years. This can be disorienting for anyone, and even more so for a child who must leave behind all that is familiar.

The difficulty of this transient lifestyle is compounded by the fact that military parents frequently have duty requirements which keep them away from home for extended periods. Military children must adjust to these absences as well.

However, the point that I am making here is not simply that Army children face many challenges, but that they are able to overcome them so successfully! This is due in large extent to our commitment to the total Army family. Within the last 10 years the Army has established many new, support programs designed to benefit the family and, more specifically, military children.

One example is the Army Family Action Plan,

(AFAP), a grass roots program which reaches all the way from subcommunities to the Department of the Army. AFAP offers members of the total Army family a chance to express their concerns, feelings and suggestions.

Closer to home we are doing a great deal to benefit military children within the Greater Stuttgart Military Community. From infants to high school seniors, GSMC has programs and activities designed to meet the needs of these youngsters and their parents.

Over the next several weeks I will be focusing on these programs and how you and your children can become more involved. This discussion will range from preschool programs to Department of Defense Dependent Schools; from Youth Services to the Exceptional Family Member Program and even a close-up on GSMC's special teen program.

Child Development Services (CDS) is the agency within GSMC which is responsible for providing quality developmental child care. This care is primarily for children who have not yet reached school age. Child Development Services provides this care through two means: child development centers (CDC) and family child care (FCC) providers.

Center-based care provides a stable environment with developmental activities and programs for children. They are staffed by dedicated, trained professionals who are truly interested in your child's development. The CDC environment also offers youngsters a chance to socialize with other children of various ages. Education specialists train and advise CDC employees about the types of programs which can enhance your child's growth.

The center-based care system accommodated over 900 children during the first quarter of this fiscal year. However, as anyone familiar with the CDC waiting lists knows, the community's need for child care far exceeds the current capacity of our seven facilities.

We are doing something about this dilemma. New centers are currently under construction in the Pattonville Family Housing area and at Panzer Kaserne. There are also plans to build a new center at Fort Barracks and a large capacity, permanent facility at Pattonville.

The Family Child Care program provides an alternative form of child care, home-based as opposed to center-based. Currently FCC can accommodate the day care needs of 930 children. Under the FCC program, individuals living in government quarters are certified to provide child care within their homes. Through this program, CDS is able to guarantee quality control of the child care provided for members of our community.

The certification process ensures that the individual is trained in safety, first aid, nutrition, early childhood development and other essentials. FCC providers are also required to have liability insurance.

Child Development Services offers an excellent comprehensive program with courses in infant care, preschool programs, and hourly care. The need for quality child care keeps growing as more women enter the Army and the civilian work force. We are continuing to work with this program to further improve service.

During April, the Month of the Military Child, bear in mind that the Army and this community care about you and your children. Celebrate by spending some quality time with your children. CDS is sponsoring an array of special activities and events in which we can all participate.

Our children are our future. Let's show them how much we care.

Take care of soldiers.

Friends are the greatest gift from God that we can receive

by Wendell G. Small, Jr., GSMC
Director of Religious Education

There was a big party at a college in the Pacific Northwest. Faculty members, wives and husbands, children and friends were gathered around — about 100 people. Then, as those things happen, one of the teenage boys was carrying a tray of dishes to the kitchen. And he tripped, and he stumbled, and he fell. Crash went the dishes. Broken into a hundred pieces were the cups and saucers and plates. The young man — humiliated, embarrassed — dissolved into tears before the hundred pairs of eyes staring at him in the silence that followed.

But an older man quietly got up, went over, and picked up some of the broken dishes; and put them on the tray. He took the tray and started walking toward the kitchen. Then — purposely — he tripped and stumbled; and the hundred pieces broke into a thousand pieces. And everyone laughed; the tensions were relieved; the boy's humiliation evaporated.

How blessed we are — you and I — when we find a friend who will come to us when we stumble, when we are in tears and feeling humiliated, when people find out how utterly human we are, how full of faults, how vulnerable — blessed are we when we find ourselves on the floor with the broken pieces of our life, and a friend stops by to share the burden and the pain.

Job was in need of such a friend. You may remember that the prologue to the Book of Job has him as a rich man, full of health, with a fine house, a great family, and many companions. Then he begins to lose those, one by one. Finally, there he is, house and family and fortune and health gone, sitting at the local garbage dump with his last three friends.

For seven days — a whole week — the friends wait in silence as their way of being with Job, being his friends. But then they begin to talk. And, instead of comforting poor Job, sitting there amidst the broken dishes of his life, and wondering why God should, as he put it, all of a sudden be using him for target practice, his so-called friends turn on him. "You've done something wrong, Job," they tell him, "some sin that has caused the Lord of Hosts to be angry with you. You've brought this on yourself, Job, by not confessing and repenting." Such is the message of his friends.

Job, however, wants something else. What he wants, what he desperately cries for, is a true friend — sincere loyalty. His three friends are not very sensitive. When Job wants comfort, they give him theological arguments. When Job longs for someone to stand by him — even against God, the friends proceed to defend God and prosecute Job. All Job wants to know is that there is some meaning to all his suffering, and all he gets are the clichés of the day. And he cries out, "Listen to me, do but listen, and let that be the comfort you offer me." (Job 21:1) But his friends will not.

Friends, friends who stick by us, friends who will listen, are not easy to come by; and blessed are we when we find such a friend — for that friend may be the greatest gift from God that we will ever receive.

Jesus once said, "I have called you friends" (John 15:15) — you and me. Just as friendship is the highest gift of God, so is God the one Friend available to us all. The first and the last. The truest and the finest.

ACS offers child protection guidelines

April is National Child Abuse Prevention Month. The Army Community Service/Family Advocacy Program of GSMC is happy to take this opportunity to increase public awareness of the problem. By offering a few suggestions on how to know your children and the signs of discipline, we hope parents can understand themselves and the signs that lead to abuse.

Child abuse is not an isolated problem. It is one of the most pressing family, health and social problems in our community and country at large. Children are our most valuable resource. There is no more important test of a society than how it treats its children. Children are not only a joy to the parents who raise them; they also represent society's future. It is important for American society to protect its children and nurture them.

One of the nicest things about being a parent is that you do not have to know everything. The job like the child, grows gradually. There is on the job training.

So welcome to the world of parenthood! Why didn't someone tell you there were going to be days when you would feel:

- old before your time,
- tired before 11 a.m. and
- too upset to think straight.

Would you have believed them, if they had? The fact is you are a parent now, and those children are yours. But, you are not alone (many parents feel the way you do), and things can get better.

So take a few moments, just for yourself, and learn how to make the rewards of parenting equal the demands. These are a few survival tips for parents: Getting to Know Your Children:

Infants:

● Learn the basics. How do you bathe a baby? Or change a diaper? You can learn! Read, ask an expert, talk to your parents and other parents.

● Love your baby. Give all you've got! Talk to your baby, touch — hold, hug, kiss — smile, and enjoy! It is impossible to spoil a baby.

● Discover what's what. Pay close attention to all the sounds (cooing, babbling, gurgling, and crying) your baby makes, as well as, facial expressions and body movements. Each one means something different.

● Never use physical force. The pressures of parenting are very real. You need to find safe, satisfying ways to release them, but never on your baby.

Toddlers:

Toddlerhood:

● Take a deep breath. The assault on your house, your personal belongings... this, too, shall pass. Right now, to your toddler, everything is new, exciting... and just waiting to be explored.

● Child proof your house. Pack away your treasures, and lock up any dangerous or poisonous items. You will breathe a lot easier, and you will not have to say "NO" so often.

● Keep the rules simple and few. Your goal is to keep your toddler safe. Table manners can wait! And, so can toilet training.

School Age:

● Show your interest. Check homework, talk about what is happening in school, ask their friends over, and find time to see your children's teachers occasionally.

● Communicate. If there is a single golden rule for parents, it is this: Talk to your children. (And, listen, too.)

● Assign children-sized chores. Children this age love to help. Just make sure the chores fit each child's capabilities. Nothing makes a child lose interest faster than having to do something too difficult or too easy.

Teenager:

● Do not be confused. A part of growth is acting like a two-year old and an adult, all in the same day. Expect your teen to do this, and be prepared to comfort, reassure and, on occasion, look the other way.

● Face the facts. Your teen will probably say "I know that", when you talk about the facts of life, but do it anyway. As a parent, you are the only one who can share the values that go with the facts!

● Let your affection show. Cool the physical demonstrations (especially when their friends are around), but make it loud and clear: you care!

● Cut those apron strings. Old values, taught from the cradle, may fade away during the teen years, but they come back — along with grown-up children you will be proud to know. Trust your teen to make it all the way.

Nothing helps your survival as a parent more than discipline. But, to be effective, discipline must teach a child how to avoid repeating misbehaviors and what to do instead. It should also be given in doses that fit the age of the child, and the size of the "crime".

A few more specifics: Babies are never candidates for discipline. They are too little! Use discipline sparingly. All children react better to approval and affection! Discipline only when reasonable expectations are not met. Define clearly, in advance, what you want them to do! Be consistent. Whatever style of discipline you choose, use it in every situation, even in public or when the grandparents are visiting. Review expectations regularly.

There are no perfect children, just as there are no perfect parents. If your children are not meeting your expectation, the expectations probably need changing, not the children. Shame, rejection, withdrawal of affection, or preferential treatment of one child over the another have no place in discipline.

Loving parents make loving children who make loving parents. If every one is well treated, child abuse will be defeated. "Don't shove me, love me". There is no excuse for any abuse. What do you gain when you cause your child pain?

Tax relief offices consolidated from 21 to 11 locations

Locations of tax relief offices were consolidated into 11 locations around the Greater Stuttgart Military Community. The offices decreased from 21 to the present number in an effort to make up for the large shortfall the program has been working under. This consolidation also makes the system more efficient and cost effective.

The breakdown of offices included at least one in each military subcommunity with five offices in the Ludwigsburg-Kornwestheim Military Subcommunity due to the number of kasernes in that area.

The location of the VAT offices in GSMC are as follows:

Letter to the editor

Reader salutes young scholars

I recently attended a luncheon at the Robinson Barracks Community Club hosted by the Greater Stuttgart Military Community Equal Opportunity staff office in celebration of Black History Month.

This year's theme, "Pride Breeds Pride," was a presentation by Ms. Mary L. Wade, a great historian well worth listening to. Also, as part of the program was "The Man Remembered," an awards presentation honoring winners of essays written in commemoration of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday.

These students, three in each of grades 1-6, were selected from schools throughout the GSMC area, which is one of the largest military communities in West Germany.

My reason for attendance, my daughter, Aisha, who was a 5th grade winner.

Fellow Americans, our children are multi-talented, not to mention that most of these precious children are honor roll members. I would like to salute the students, parents, and faculty members for their guidance throughout the year.

Most noteworthy is the fact that all 5th grade winners came from not only the same school, but the same class, honor roll members also. A pat on the back for their loving teacher.

So, Ms. June St. John, I'm quite sure that your 5th graders accepted these awards for you too, and I would like to wish you, along with our future leaders, good luck and God's speed.

Gratefully,

Special Olympians reach for much more than gold

Stuttgart youths experience thrill of competition

Story and photos by Bob Gonsalves

There were no television cameras dotting the path of the winding sled run. The low rumble of electric generators powering rows of network mobile studios could not be heard. At this Olympics, the athletes left as anonymously as they arrived.

But for one week in March, the calm of the Bavarian Alps was shattered by the excitement of a special competition where all who participated won the gold.

In what could be best described as a celebration of independence, military communities throughout Germany rallied to the town of Berchtesgaden for the 9th Annual Winter Special Olympics.

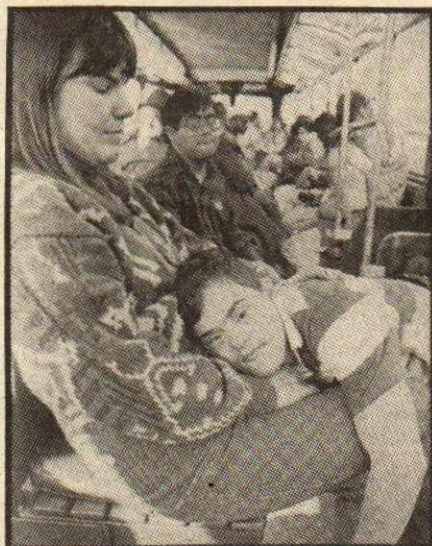

Sponsored by the Department of Defense Dependent School's Special Education Program, Hinterbrand Lodge, and Hessen, a Darmstadt outdoor education branch, the Winter Special Olympics is a means of providing outdoor winter activities such as sledding and Nordic skiing to physically and mentally-challenged children who otherwise would not be afforded such an opportunity, according to DoDDS Regional Special Education Coordinator Jan Williams.

"These children tend to live sheltered lives because of their handicaps, and very often don't get an opportunity to participate in physical activities that most kids enjoy doing," said Williams.

"We forget that these kids have just as wide or wider range of emotion as a child who doesn't face the same challenges. These kids get just as sad and just as happy as any other kid," added Williams.

The Greater Stuttgart Military Community sent 21 young competitors ranging from ages 9 through 18 to the Special Olympics, each taking home something more valuable than any medal.

"It's the first time away from home for some of these kids, and it's a chance for them to show some true independence as far as self help," said GSMC Winter Special Olympic Chairperson Renita DeGraff.

"We also see a different look from some kids who for the most part stay in somewhat of a shell. When you take these kids out of their environment and surround them with kids their own age, some real outgoing personalities show through," DeGraff added.

For GSMC, it was their fifth year of participation in the Winter Special Olympics, and their roster of young athletes has grown from just five competitors in 1985 to their current number of 21.

"It's our goal to bring to these events as many kids as we can," explained DeGraff. "The organization has really improved over the last few years and it's a great experience for all who are involved."

Representing GSMC in the 9-12 age group were:

Representing GSMC in the 13-18 age group were:

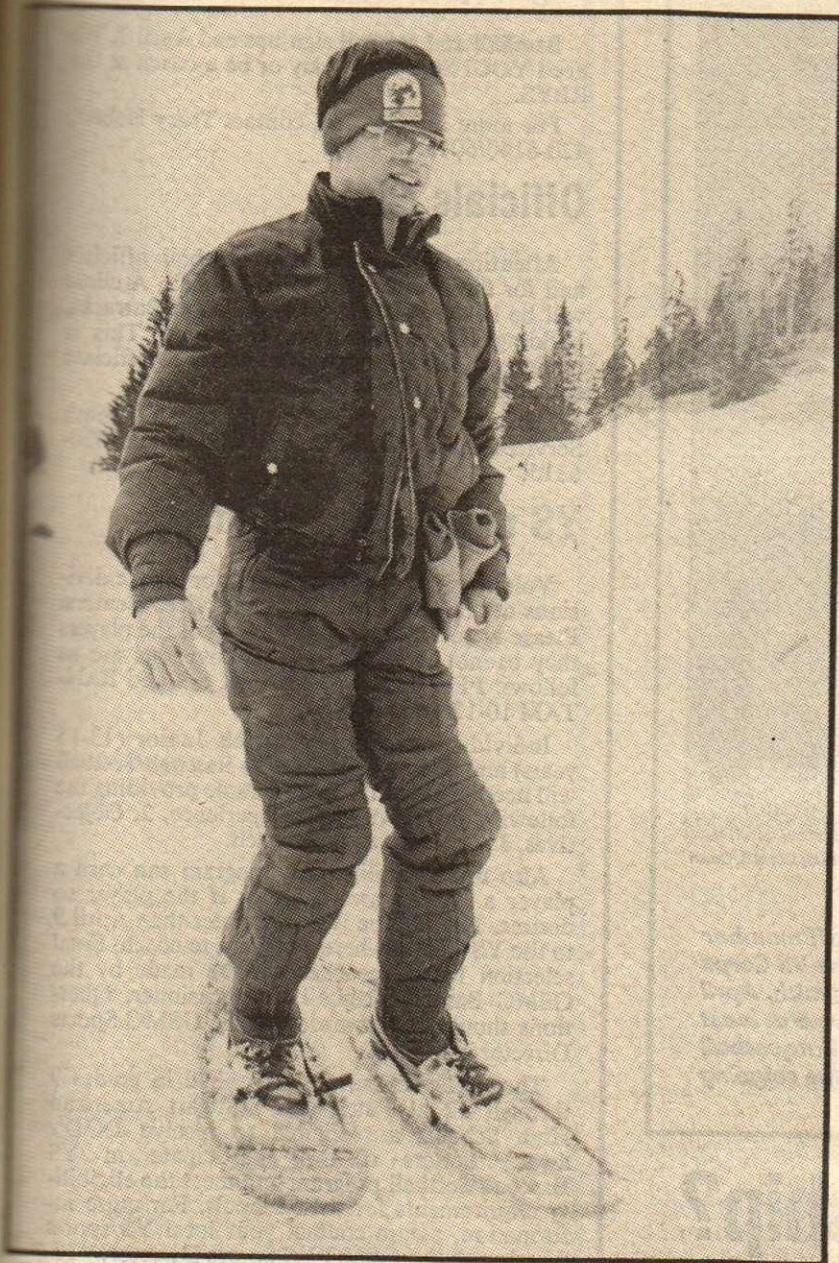

Billy Mahood, Mike Roe, David Metcalf, Danny Fehling, Amanda Scott, Angela Fink, Billy Easton, Jody French, James Hairston, Rusty Welch, Mark Axtell, and Todd Livingston.

Congratulations for a job well done!

What a Racquet!

Louis Washington pounds the ball into a blur at practice. Washington, a personal staff member of the Deputy Commander-in-Chief in EUCOM Headquarters at Patch Barracks, won the VII Corps Racquetball Championship and will continue on to the USAREUR tournament held in Munich, April 6-9. Washington, 42, has amassed an incredible number of championships, ranging from at least 10 VII Corps and USAREUR titles to winning in the All-Army Trials and Interservice Racquetball Championships. He's the reigning All-Army trials champ for three years running and the reigning Interservice Racquetball champ for the last two years. Good luck from GSMC!

Who will win NCAA championship? Upsets dominate college tourney

Lionel R. Green
Sports writer

Tonight is the night.
The NCAA Championship.
College basketball's showcase featuring the winners of the Final Four.

Once again the Big East threatened to dominate the Final Four, but Illinois (ranked 3rd, 31-4) held off Syracuse, and Duke (ranked 9th, 28-7) slammed the door on Georgetown in their regional championships. Still a dark horse stampeded through the tournament to give the Big East one last ray of hope. They go by the name of Seton Hall (ranked 11th, 30-6), and they made the Final Four by unceremoniously dumping UNLV in the West Regional Championship, 84-61.

The last piece in this puzzle is a second Big Ten team, the Michigan Wolverines (ranked 10th, 28-7). Since they play Illinois in the Final Four, that will insure one Big Ten team a trip to the finals, and a chance to claim a second NCAA Championship in the last three years (Indiana won it in '87).

Illinois has beaten Michigan twice during the regular season. Both times by more than 10 points. Can they defeat the Wolverines again? Michigan is coming off a 102-65 massacre of Virginia in the Southeast Regional Championship, while Illinois fought a hard battle against Syracuse, 89-86, to survive in the Midwest.

They say the third time's a charm. Michigan should win a dogfight over Illinois.

In the other game, Seton Hall takes on an experienced Duke Blue Devil team with the likes of Danny Ferry and Quin Snyder leading the way. The Pirates show up with a lot of heart and desire, an image of their coach, P.J. Carlesimo.

What is a Seton Hall anyway? Actually, he's the first American saint, but Duke gets the nod over Seton Hall anyway, but if the game stays close, the saintly Pirates will have their prayers answered. The Devils won't win, no matter what color they are, if the game is decided by a field goal or less.

If Michigan plays Seton Hall in the final game, the Wolverines will overpower the Pirates to win the championship. However, Duke will take the Wolverines by the claws and defeat Michigan if these teams meet for the championship. Duke's got too many weapons in the key positions, and Glen Rice and the Wolverines know it. Rice, though, is an arsenal of weapons himself leading the tournament in scoring averaging 31.3 points a game. He could be the spark that might burn the Blue Devils.

Illinois, who's got to be the favorite to win it all going into the Final Four, will have a hard time of taking either Seton Hall or Duke. The Fighting Illini are the perfect team for the Pirates to play because Illinois has a similar style to UNLV, and Seton Hall crushed the Runnin' Rebels to the tune of 23 points.

The classic match-up would be Duke versus Illinois. This game would probably go down to the wire with either team winning it. Duke, though, seems to have it together mentally. A team that can hold off a furious Georgetown attack, and still win by eight is a team that can definitely stand the heat when the game's on the line.

My personal pick? Seton Hall. Anybody that can give Bobby Knight and the Indiana Hoosiers a good spanking has my full support.

Who knows? With all the upsets of the higher powers, this could be the year for the saints to march away with the trophy proclaiming them the NCAA Champions.
