Scalled "Summer Sense," and it's based on the stat if the consequence of behavior is known, sense prevails and negative results are pre-drunk driving incidents and other alcohol-related accidents, according to Staff Sgt. Johnny Sniffen, GSMC Crime Prevention NCO.

Summer brings with it an increased number of drunk drivers who over-estimate their motoring skills. Although Sniffen emphasized prevention as the heart of the program, enforcement is no less a priority.

According to current statistics, drunk driving arrests in GSMC are up from last year. On average, four soldiers in the community are apprehended each week.

"The military police and the German Polizei have established a close liaison, and between the two of us, if you make a mistake while driving drunk, you're in trouble," said Sniffen.

In most units, the consequences of driving while intoxicated are an automatic field grade article 15, a general officer letter of reprimand, loss of driving privileges in Europe, possible loss of military license, and automatic enrollment in a drug and alcohol counseling program.

"For the most part, your military career is either over or on permanent hold," said Sniffen.

Though no one is immune from the effects of having too much to drink, according to Sgt. Dave Westerling, a drug awareness instructor from the Crime Prevention Office, E-4 males living off-post lead the list in DWI arrests.

"Commanders need to take more interest in the soldiers living off-post while reemphasizing to their company soldiers the dangers of driving drunk," said Westerling.

Both Sniffen and Westerling agree that the success of the program depends greatly on the commitment made by supervisors to educate their subordinates about drugs and alcohol, and the use of good 'Summer Sense,' by all.

Zolen is one of over 20 soldiers, civilians, and German nationals who belong to the club. NMAC is dedicated to the building, maintenance and flying of model airplanes. The models have wingspans ranging from six to 14 feet, fly ranges of up to two miles and can register speeds anywhere from 15 mph (for trainer flyers) to 100 mph (semi-scale planes). Models of some of the great planes of the past — like the English-made Bristol M1 and the legendary ME109 Messerschmitt — can be constructed.

Commander's comment

Army Community Service grows toward excellence

Nothing epitomizes the Army Community of Excellence program more than Army Community Service. As its name clearly states, it serves the community. As an organization, it combines innovation, creativity, and teamwork to help community residents. Volunteers are the foundation of its success.

ACS had its 24th birthday in July. What started out as a thought in someone's head, became a reality in 1965 with a couple of volunteers giving out pots and pans along with some information. Like all growing things, the program matured. It gained responsibilities and added people to the staff, all the while monitoring the pulse of the community, so that the needs of the residents would be met.

In each of the six military subcommunities, you have an ACS center staffed with professionals, whose job is to work with families and single soldiers to enhance readiness and retention. The philosophy is: if the family is happy, the military member will stay in the service and perform at a maximum level.
Is your ACS working? You decide.

Recently, 19 exceptional family members spent two weeks at Camp Rainbow. Mary Lennox, coordinator of the program, said the summer camp offered our severely to profoundly handicapped residents the chance to experience the excitement of being at camp with older children. Imagine the thrill of that for someone normally exempt from the routine events of non-handicapped children.

Last week, ACS employee Gloria Brodie conducted one of many recruitment seminars held throughout the year for people interested in the Foster Parent and Spouse Shelter program. Six people attended the meeting, expressing their interest in opening their homes to abused or neglected children and/or spouses for anywhere from 60 to 90 days.

Members of the Outreach Program visited a newly arrived woman in a German hotel. They convinced her that remaining with her children, all day long, in the hotel room wasn't the way to calm her fears about living in a foreign country. The ACS Mothers' Support Group would help.

At Robinson Barracks alone, Family Member Employment Assistance Program employee Norma Perez sees 400 to 500 people a month. Army Emergency Relief, which financially bails out soldiers in dire strains over $100,000 in its last fund drive.

ACS has many more programs than what's mentioned here. From a humble beginning, the purpose for which they were created — caring Army family —assured their survival and grown works for you. But without volunteers, the programme of the program, ACS can only provide services the dollar will stretch. With volunteers, ACS community and the community helps ACS.

Hat's off to the folks in the Moehringen-De Military Subcommunity. There, ACS has 14 volunteers. Vaihingen looks good, too, with 10 are followed by Bad Cannstatt-Zuffenhausen seven. There are four at Nellingen-Esslingen-Echterdingen, two at Boeblingen-Sindelfingen and none at Ludwigsburg-Kornwestheim. Low figures are seven to the control of the cont none at Ludwigsburg-Kornwestheim. Low figures some subcommunities may be attributed to the recent permanent change of station moves.

That's why I'm appealing to our new residents. you want to be a professionally trained volunteer donate your time to ACS. It will help a lot of people And the nature of the work, as well as the credit receive for job experience, will benefit you, too.

Take care of soldier Maj. Gen. James B. Alles

Attacking myths about war and peace

by Steve Snyder Stuttgart Citizen staff

All great civilizations construct myths to explain their origins, goals, and highest ideals. Danger arises, though, when myths deny observable reality. That becomes a recipe for disaster.

Myths about war and peace - and the relationship between continue to flourish in America, even (or especially) among the intelligentsia. Advocates of 'peace studies" consistently exhibit the most fundamental ignorance about war, its roots and the inevitable consequences flowing from its prosecution. They seem to feel that war can be wished away by a plethora of good intentions.

But it can't, of course, and in military policy what you don't know can sure hurt you.

Fortunately, intellectual renegades like Col. Harry Summers, think-tanker Edward Luttwak, and British academic John Keegan have continued to pour out sober studies on security policy. In that vein, a new book deserves mention. War: Ends and Means, by Paul Seabury and Angelo Codevilla, was reviewed by Pulitzer Prize-winning historian Walter A. McDougall recently (National Review, July 14.) He credits the authors with exposing and rebutting "10 major myths about war propagated with lethal effect by either the "peace studies" crowd or our civilian technocrats." It's fascinating stuff.

Myth #1: Wars are the product of impersonal forces economic competition, arms races, etc. According to the review, this mistakes "symptom for cause, for ultimately war springs from a flawed human nature that creates situations in which 'reasonable people regard kill or be killed as the best option available.'

Myth #2: War is bad, peace is good. Wrong answer! War, in fact, is sometimes less fatal than "peace." McDougall notes that in our century "some 35 million people have died as a result of military operations" while "over 100 million have been killed by political police" ranging from Nazi Germany to Stalinist Russia, Maoist China, and Pol Pot's Cambodia.

Myth #3: Fighting never solved anything. Well, the Vietnamese boat people, Israelies, and many others would emphatically disagree.

Myths #4 & 5: Military power is something a nation can buy and war is essentially a material operation. Not really. The United States had the manpower, GNP, and technology to crush the enemy in our last war but it didn't happen. Military service is "an act of devotion" and a nation which can't inspire such is doomed in the long run.

Myth #6: Nuclear weapons have changed forever the principles of strategy and tactics. Nope. "The precepts of Sun Tzu and Clausewitz concerning strategic deception, the indirect approach, economy of force, striking the enemy's center of mass, and breaking his will are as valid today as ever," the review notes.

Myth #7: Modern weapons have made war more destructive. Wrong, again because "the damage done in war is a function of intentions and not tools."

Myth #8: All parties in a war are on the same moral plane. Here the authors bust the old canard about the United States and Russia both having nuclear weapons and hence not being really different in a moral sense. But there is a moral difference between nuking an intractable enemy (as the United States did to Japan at the end of World War II) and using poison gas against Afghan peasants (as the Soviets did). How and why you use your muscle is the ballgame, morally speaking.

Myth #9: War destroys society and its civic virtues. On the contrary, "war is more accurately viewed as society's supreme test . . . in which the people vote for the survival or destruction of their own policy according to their willingness to sacrifice.

Myth #10: The world is "outgrowing" war. The authors, alas, make the point that "today's world is filled with more people animated by greater hatred and possessed of more means to make war than ever before." Look at a map and weep.

One can disagree, then, about what constitutes reality in war or anything else. But grasping reality sometimes requires serious intellectual sweat. The authors of this book have made the effort. Readers can only benefit.

Nellingen model airplane club takes to air

by Steve Snyder Stuttgart Citizen staff

The passion to fly assumes many guises and exerts so strong a hold on those infected that it sometimes approaches the point of obsession.

A case in point is the Nellingen Model Airplane Club (NMAC).

In existence since 1972, the club has grown from a casual group of hangers-on into a formal, private organization which currently lists 29 members.

Building and flying model airplanes is the club's raison d'etre. Members actively promote every aspect of their intricate hobby. Indeed, NMAC takes part in events scattered throughout southern Germany, recruiting new followers and entertaining guests. Newcomers receive expert instruction on how to build and fly their remotecontrolled craft.

Tropf, who works at the Consolidated Maintenance Center at Wallace Barracks, has been a member since 1975. He recalls his fascination with flight.

"One day I came across a helicopter model and was hooked," he said. "I tried everything to fly but it didn't work out and so I built a model of a Mississippi paddleboat instead." Fortunately, he was attending a German-American volunteer meeting at Nellingen and saw some guys flying. "I talked to them, started coming to meetings, began work on a glider model and went on from there," he said.

"Right now, I have about 16 models (in various states of readiness), all fixedwing (i.e., no helicopters).

The model airplanes have wingspans stretching from six to 14 feet, fly ranges of up to two miles, and register speeds from 15 mph (for trainer flyers) to 100 mph (semi-scale planes tested and modified).

All of this, of course, costs money. Spec. Christopher Zolen, 503rd Engineer Co., Ludendorff Kaserne, spent $1,500 on his model. That's par for the course, but Tropf emphasizes that fledgling flyers can buy used versions for as low as $25 or invest in kits that run from $160 to $200.

More advanced models are available, too. It's possible, in fact, to "fly models as they were originally made," according to Tropf. The models "resemble the original to the extent that they copy the original's behavior in the air, having the same good or bad habits the originals had." A model of the ME109 Messerschmitt, for example,

The model aircraft are guided by remote-control would have all of the maneuverability of that legendary fighter. Tropf notes that there's a version of the English-made Bristol M1 extant. The model is a copy of the one-winged plane that was actually outperforming bi-planes in tests conducted during World War I. But the plane was rejected by the British War Control Board at the time, "One wing only canot do it," it said.

Tropf admits getting a kick out of flying a model of "The Dove of War," a famous single-engine, 2-seater, reconnaisance plane of early World-War-I vintage.

Much pleasure comes, too, from cementing bonds of friendship between Germans and Americans. A former teacher who still conducts language classes when time permits, Tropf tries to "get Americans off the beaten path and show them a Germany that's not in the tourist manuals." The Nellingen Model Airplane Club is one vehicle which serves that purpose.

The club is located on Nellingen
Barracks, Vann Road, next to the Property Disposal Office lot. Weekends are slated for flying time, usually running from 10 a.m. to noon and from 2 p.m. until dusk.
Under the expert tutelage of Bernard Gill, NMAC operates a quick training program for recruits designed to insure that everrotating soldiers don't waste money or time getting started in the hobby. Club meetings are held on the first Tuesday of every month, flight schedules are mapped out, and friendships cultivated — usually at a nearby Gasthaus.

Would-be members are encouraged to contact Uli Tropf at 420-6152/7325 or Bernard Gill at 07141-80907.

Frank Herold, a German member of NMAC, prepares to send his chopper up into the wild, blue yonder.

The Greater Stuttgart Military Community Youth Services baseball and soft-ball teams continue to shine in the VII Corps and USAREUR tournaments.

The Ludwigsburg-Kornwestheim Cardinals won the VII Corps Girls Softball championship Junior A (13-15 years) division at Munich, Aug. 6.

Ludwigsburg-Kornwestheim knocked off Fuerth, 15-6, followed that with a victory over Schweinfurt, 16-10, and defeated Augsburg, 10-8, to take the VII Corps crown.

In the championship game, Christina Welsh and Tina Westberg combined pitching arms to gain the victory for Ludwigsburg-Kornwestheim. They were backed up by a stubborn defense.

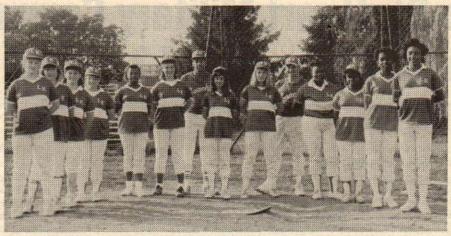

For the tournament, Keisha Anderson blasted three home runs and Paige Christian pounded two to lead the power department. Defensively, Westberg sparkled at shortstop and Tywanna Urquahart and Michelle Hill did the same in the outfield.

Catcher Becky Evans made three big tag-outs at the plate in the championship game and had a solid tournament performance as well. First baseman Mieka Thomas and second baseman Stephanie Walker kept the right side of the infield hemmed in throughout the tournament. Anissa Smith and Nicki Jiles played a key role offensively and Heather Spurlock had a solid tournament as well.

Heading to the USAREUR tournament at Berlin, Aug. 17-20, Coach Clifford Westberg and Assistant Coaches Thomas Pastrano and Ron Chastain know their team has a shot. According to Westberg, they have to take it slow and not look too far ahead.

"When we get there, we just got to play one game at a time," Westberg said. "And hopefully go home with the gold."

In the girls Junior B division, Robinson Barracks won the VII Corps championship at Herzo Base near Nuernberg in awesome fashion outscoring their opponents 72-18 in three games. Robinson Barracks averaged 24 runs a game and outscored their opponents by an average margin of 18 runs.

In their first game, Robinson Barracks bombarded Herzo Base, 24-8, and then ripped Bad Kitzingen, 30-9. They won the championship game over Bad Kitzingen, 18-1.

Why the overwhelming performance?
"The Baden-Wuerttemberg tournament was real tough," explained Coach Glenn Shields. "I think it really prepared us mentally for the VII Corps.
Also, our kids have peaked at this time of year."

Danielle Mathis provided the punch offensively for Robinson Barracks in the tournament with two grand slams. Angie Jackson shined defensively at second base, and catcher Lisa Shaffer played a tough catcher nabbing three runners at the plate. Lori Shields pitched the three games holding the opponents at bay consistently throughout the tournament.

Team captain Nikki Jackson played a stubborn third base and provided the inspiration in the championship effort. Center fielder Dorcas Ham played well and her back-up pitching was the reason for Robinson Barracks getting to VII corps in the first place.

First baseman Tweety Willis didn't see no "putty tat," just all ball, as she had an excellent offensive tournament. Kim Upchurch scored more runs than any one else in the tournament scoring five in one game. Dee Stamps reinforced her billing as the best defensive outfielder and Yvonne Brakel was the essential utility person playing both in-and outfield.

Rookies Yancisca Harris and Sarri Pentecost contributed to the cause with outstanding effort, and Diana Nieto blasted the longest homerun of the tournament.

Coach Shields and Assistant Coach Tammy Murray took their team down to the USAREUR tournament at Herzo Base Aug. 10.

"Our chances of winning the USAR-EUR are good," Shields said before heading to Herzo Base, "because we don't have a one-man show, but an entire team effort."

In other Youth Services action, the Ludwigsburg-Kornwestheim boys finished second in the VII Corps Junior A tournament and the Patch Senior (16-19) boys and girls finished third in their respective USAREUR championship tournaments.

Even if you lose the racquetball match, your heart and body are the real winners

by Lionel R. Green Stuttgart Citizen staff

How many times have you been in a life-and-death struggle with an opponent on the racquetball court and still managed to lose three straight? You were tired, and your opponent didn't even sweat. There is some good news for you, though.

Studies have shown that the heart-rate intensity of a racquetball player is greatest when the opponent is of equal or stronger ability. Translated: You are getting an excellent aerobic workout that makes your heart stronger and keeps your body fit just because your opponent is better than you. So, even though your opponent won the game, you won the battle of the heart-rate intensities.

Winning that battle may not be much of a consolation to you, but it's a far greater victory in improving your quality of life. So, if you lose the next game just tell your opponent that deep down in your heart, you know you won.

"There are two things to remember about racquetball," said Freddie L. Giddens, NCOIC of VIII Corps Physical Fitness. "Aerobic benefits are gained only when the players are evenly matched and have long volleys."

If you play doubles racquetball, studies have also shown that your heart rate is lower than if you play a singles match. No surprise, but the doubles players' heart rates were still above the standards set by the American College of Sports Medicine to achieve cardiorespiratory fitness.

The results of one study performed at the University of Arkansas at Little Rock showed in hour-long games, single players kept their hearts in the aerobic range (from 60 to 90 percent of their maximum heart rates) virtually the entire time. These players averaged 83 percent of their maximum heart rates which is an extremely high level of exercise.

Doubles players managed to keep their hearts in the aerobic range for three quarters of hour-long games. Their average heart rates were 67 percent which is a perfectly respectable aerobic workout, especially if you're heart-health conscious.

The players studied were amateurs, not professionals, so their heart rates would probably come closer to mirroring yours. All players were evenly matched.

Whether playing singes or doubles, the bottom line is racquetball is a good aerobic workout anytime. So, even if you feel bad about losing, your heart will feel good because it's winning.
