GSMC residents seeking tax relief from the German value added tax (14%) are reminded that a new fee policy did go into effect March 1. This policy increases the fee for processing tax relief requests to $4 per request. As previously reported by the Citizen, the fee increase was directed by HQ USAREUR due to a budget shortfall in the 14% tax relief program throughout USAREUR.

GSMC observes Federal Women's Week: official cites heritage and vision

The Greater Stuttgart Military Community kicked off its observance of Federal Women's Week and Women's History Month with a lunchtime seminar at the Robinson Barracks Hilltop Theater on Tuesday, March 7. The seminar featured guest speaker, Patricia Watkins Lattimore, Director of the National Capital Service Center (Washington, D.C.), U.S. Department of Labor.

Lattimore began her career in federal service in 1964 as a clerical worker, GS-3, at the Washington, D.C. post office. During the next 25 years she has assumed increasingly responsible positions within the executive and legislative branches of the government. During this period she has also pursued higher education and professional development to augment her knowledge and skills.

Since accepting her current position in 1986, Lattimore is a member of the Senior Executive Service, the highest level of civil service for federal employees.

Lattimore presented an enthusiastic speech to the gathering of over 150 men and women. Her speech began with a discussion of this year's theme for the annual observance, "A heritage of strength and vision."

Lattimore said that until very recently the contributions of women have been omitted from mainstream American history.

However, she added, women should not look back in anger, as this anger tends to create a burden. A more positive approach is for women to look to the future, toward their continued progress and development within society and the workforce.

Lattimore also addressed the topic of trends and shifts within the American workforce. She cited a Department of Labor study, titled "Workforce 2000," which concerns labor trends through the end of this century.

According to this study the fastest growing employment areas will be the professional, technical and sales fields. These fields tend to require workers with sophisticated skills and advanced levels of education. Lattimore told the group that a college education and computer literacy are two primary qualifications that attract prospective employers.

The speaker also stressed changes in how America does business. Considering the rising influence of multinational corporations, workers can make themselves more marketable by becoming multilingual, said Lattimore. She continued that understanding how business is conducted internationally is another way employees can gain a competitive edge.

In conclusion Lattimore advised the attendees to prepare for the coming changes by charting a course for the future which takes into account employment and labor trends. Individuals who are well informed about the future of labor demand are better equipped to make realistic career choices.

Following a question and answer session, Lattimore was escorted to lunch at the Robinson Barracks Community Club by the Federal Women's Program Steering Committee, who had sponsored the event. About 25 committee members and 40 others enjoyed sharing their lunch with the honored guest speaker.

Outlook

Commander's comment

Sexual harassment: dealing with the problem

As part of our focus on equal opportunity for everyone in the Army family, the elimination of sexual harassment from the work place is a continuing priority. In the Greater Stuttgart Military Community, as elsewhere in the Army, commanders and civilian managers are assigned with this responsibility. In spite of the emphasis given to it, sexual harassment continues to be a problem and more than that, a crime.

In order to understand this issue we must all understand what constitutes sexual harassment. Sexual harassment is a form of sexual discrimination that involves unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature at the work site.

The major way to determine whether an individual's conduct constitutes sexual harassment is the consequences of that conduct. In other words, if submission to or rejection of the conduct is made a term or condition of a person's job, pay or career, then this is sexual harassment. It makes no difference whether these consequences are stated straightforwardly or simply implied.

Another consequence of sexual harassment may be that an individual's reaction to this type of conduct is used as a basis for career or employment decisions affecting that individual. Unwelcome sexual conduct may also interfere with an individual's job performance by creating an intimidating, hostile or offensive working environment.

Recently there was a very serious case of sexual harassment which occurred within VII Corps, although outside of GSMC. The individual charged with the crime of sexual harassment was convicted in a court martial and subsequently reduced to the lowest enlisted grade and given a bad conduct discharge. This case serves as an example of how seriously the Army deals with individuals guilty of sexual harassment.

It is the responsibility of commanders and supervisors to ensure that all work environments throughout our community are free from sexual harassment. If this type of unacceptable conduct is ongoing at the work site, the manager is held personally accountable for taking appropriate corrective measures to guarantee that the sexual harassment ceases immediately and does not recur.

Military members or civilian employees who feel they have been victims of sexual harassment have avenues of recourse open to them.

If a soldier feels that sexual harassment is present at the work site, he or she should first raise the issue through the chain of command. If this primary means of solving the problem is not effective, soldiers may contact their Equal Opportunity Advisor or the Equal Opportunity Office.

Similarly, civilians should first address their concerns about sexual harassment to their supervisory chain. If the harassment persists, civilians may contact the Equal Employment Opportunity Office.

Anyone who feels that he or she has been victimized and files a complaint is protected by law from reprisals from the harasser.

The key element in preventing and eliminating sexual harassment is education. Individuals must be made aware of what constitutes unacceptable behavior and that such behavior is not tolerated in any form by the Army.

Another important factor is professionalism. When everyone behaves in a professional manner at the work site, sexual harassment will cease to be a problem. This means that managers relate and evaluate subordinates solely on the basis of their work competence and performance. Co-workers interact on professional matters within an atmosphere of mutual respect and cooperation.

Conduct of a sexual nature is not appropriate or acceptable in the work environment.

Controlling and, if possible, eliminating sexual harassment is a responsibility we all should and do take very seriously. Sexual harassment violates the trust, integrity and organizational values which are so vital to accomplishing our Army mission. As such, it's a crime with serious consequences.

Let's work together to prevent sexual harassment and create a more productive and comfortable working environment for everyone in the GSMC family.

Take care of soldiers,
Maj. Gen. James B. Allen, Jr.

Lent: Christians search for sense of meaning

by C.H. (Maj.) Michael D. Mantooth
Pattonville Protestant Chaplain

An irrepressible need of man is to have purpose. Brilliant men from atheists to Christians have described this need. George Bernard Shaw said, "Every man is ill at ease until he has found his niche." The equally brilliant but caustic Nietzsche said, "He who has a why to live can bear almost any how." Dietrich Bonhoeffer, when he was in prison and was destined to be hanged one year later, made this statement, "In view of our supreme purpose, the present difficulties and disappointments seem trivial."

In other words, it's really not external circumstances that get people down. It's their belief that there is no meaning and purpose to what they are doing. This is a powerful truth. We can put up with nearly anything if we believe there is meaning and purpose to it. Returning American prisoners of war following the Vietnam conflict attest to conditions where they were stripped of all possessions and reduced almost to the status of an animal. In such conditions, they faced the question whether life really had any meaning at all. These prisoners were able to survive conditions that would ultimately have destroyed them. Why? Because they somehow found hope and a sense of meaning and purpose.

For Christians, to observe the forty days of Lent is to also search for a sense of meaning and purpose in their lives. After being baptized by John in the River Jordan, Jesus went off alone into the wilderness where he spent forty days asking himself the question what it meant to be Jesus. During Lent, Christians are supposed to ask one way or another what it means to be themselves.

If you had to bet everything you have on whether there is a God or whether there isn't, which side would get your money and why? When you look at your face in the mirror, what do you see in it that you most like and what do you see in it that you most deplore? If you had only one last message to leave to the handful of people who are most important to you, what would it be in 25 words or less? Of all the things you have done in your life, which is the one that makes you happiest to remember? Is there any person in the world, or any cause, that, if circumstances called for it, you would be willing to die for? If this were the last day of your life, what would you do with it?

Nellingen opens rec center

By Douglas R. Scott
2d COSCOM Public Affairs Officer

Calling it a "great day" for the Nellingen-Esslingen-Echterdingen Subcommunity, Brig. Gen. Paul J. Vanderploog, subcommunity commander, officially opened Nellingen's new Soldier/Family Recreation Center in a ceremony at Nellingen Barracks on February 10, 1989.

The ceremony, attended by many Nellingen-area residents, began with remarks by Doris E. Mackey, director of the GSMC recreation branch. Mackey thanked the facility staff, and praised community leaders for their efforts in making this center — the largest of its kind in the Greater Stuttgart Military Community — a reality.

Vanderploog began his remarks by recognizing facility planners for their "difficult but worthwhile tasks."

The general continued by stressing that the format and focus of the new center would differ somewhat from traditional "rec" centers. Saying that today's military differs from the past with its increase in married soldiers, he emphasized that this center would "work hard to shape meaningful programs" for military families as well as the single soldier.

He added that the center would be a success only if it meets the needs of the community. He encouraged community residents to offer feedback on the new facility to insure it meets those needs.

Following the ribbon-cutting, which marked the official opening, community organizations were on hand to provide information and advice on local activities.

Brig. Gen. Vanderploog summed up by saying this new center will make the community a "better place to live and work."

Elections

Poll officials set registration deadlines

Pennsylvania

Pennsylvania residents will vote on May 16 in a statewide primary to select candidates to run in the general election on November 7. The elections will be for two judges of the state supreme court, two superior court judges and one judge of the commonwealth. Some local elections will also be held in the counties. Pennsylvanians temporarily residing overseas serving in the military or Merchant Marine and their spouses and dependents, may participate in these elections by mail.

Pennsylvanians residing abroad may use the federal post card application (FPCA) to request an absentee ballot. These voters will also be sent the state mail registration card. They must, however, return it to the board not later than 30 days before the election. If they are already registered, the FPCA must arrive seven days preceding the election. If an FPCA is not used, separate requests must be made for the state registration card and an absentee ballot.

Ballots must be mailed approximately 30 days before the election. Voted ballots must be received by election officials not later than the Friday before the election.

Pennsylvania voting procedures are contained in the 1988/89 "Voting Assistance Guide" which is available through the voting assistance officer in each military unit.

Ohio elections

Municipal primaries for Ohio begin May 2, 1989 for statutory cities and will extend through June and September for charter cities. The general election is slated for Nov. 7.

A single FPCA will serve to register and request a ballot for both the primary and general election. If not registered, the FPCA must be received by the county board of elections 30 days before the election. Party affiliation must be provided when requesting a primary election ballot. Ballots are mailed 35 days before the election. Ballots voted by persons outside of the U.S. will be dated not later than the day of the election.

Proud past

Federal Women's Week honors job struggle

GSMC and USAREUR observed Women's History and Federal Women's Week last week, honoring women who have epitomized the theme of strength and vision in service to our nation.

Women in public service actually antedated the United States Government. A woman postmaster was appointed in 1773, 14 years before the Constitution was signed, and other isolated appointments were made. However, there was no federal employment of women until the period between 1862 and 1868. An 1870 law gave department heads authority to appoint women as clerks at higher salary rates at their discretion. Thus, women clerks received $600 per annum for the same work for which men clerks received $1,200 to $1,800 per annum.

The Classification Act of 1923 established the concept of equal pay for equal work even though the 1870 law remained in effect. In 1934, the Attorney General ruled that agencies had the option to request men only or women only for filling positions. Thus, men were requested for most professional and executive positions or positions with duties that involved traveling, were hazardous, required contact with public, etc. Women were requested for very few occupations while the majority were employed in generally lower grade clerical jobs with limited advancement opportunities.

Very little happened until 1961 when President Kennedy appointed the first Commission on the Status of Women, headed by Eleanor Roosevelt, to study federal employment, among other topics.

In 1962, at the request of the Commission on the Status of Women, the Civil Service Commission mandated that agencies submit substantiating reasons when only one sex was specified in recruiting for a position. Accordingly, most agencies eliminated this practice. That same year, Attorney General Robert Kennedy strengthened the commission's position by ruling that 1870 law invalid. Agencies could no longer request one sex only, except for certain custodial positions and those that required carrying a gun. In 1965, Congress repealed the 1870 law that for almost 100 years impaired women's opportunities within the federal government.

In 1963, President Kennedy established and Interdepartmental Committee on the Status of Women to continue the emphasis on women's employment begun by the 1961 commission, which had expired. The committee, composed of Cabinet Secretaries and the Chairman of the Civil Service Commission, had as one of its mandates to make the federal sector a model employer in areas of both race and sex. At this time, CSC Chairman John W. Macy, Jr., asked Evelyn Harrison, Deputy Director of the Bureau of Programs and Standards, to coordinate the women's program for him, and thus the Federal Women's Program was born in late 1963.

When the 1964 Civil Rights Act prohibiting sex and other discrimination in employment was passed, it directed the President to issue an executive order applying the same standards to the federal sector. The Committee on the Status of Women worked to get "sex" discrimination included in the executive order, but to no avail. EO 11246 was signed in September 1965, omitting sex discrimination.

In October 1967, President Johnson signed EO 11246, and "sex" was added to other prohibited forms of discrimination (race, color, religion and national origin) in federal employment. The Civil Service Commission responded to this new order by establishing the Federal Women's Program to enhance employment and advancement opportunities for women.

In August 1969, President Nixon signed EO 11478, integrating the Federal Women's Program into the overall Equal Employment Opportunity Program, and, in addition, raised the focus of attention on the Federal Women's Program by placing it under the stewardship of Directors of Equal Employment Opportunity. Recognizing that full utilization of qualified women was not a reality, President Nixon advised heads of Executive departments and agencies, in an April 1971 memorandum, that the federal government can and must demonstrate its recognition of the equality of women by making better use of their skills in high level positions. To this end he:

(1) required each agency head to submit plans for attracting key level women into top appointive and career positions and in senior level non-career positions,

(2) directed agency heads to designate a substantial number of women on advisory boards and committees, and

(3) appointed a new White House staff assistant (i.e. Barbara Hackman Franklin) to help in the talent search for outstanding women.

In March 1972, the Equal Employment Opportunity Act, Public Law 92-261, brought Federal employees and agencies under the equal employment opportunity provisions of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 for the first time and gave the Civil Service Commission additional enforcement powers to insure that all personnel actions in government were free from discrimination. The Equal Employment Opportunity Program, including the Federal Women's Program, was now public law.

In October 1978, President Jimmy Carter signed the Civil Service Reform Act which transferred the leadership and enforcement provisions of the Civil Rights Act affecting the federal government to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, effective January 1979. Concurrently, the Civil Service Commission was redesignated the Office of Personnel Management.

The Federal Women's Program plays a vital role in assuring the equality of women in federal service.

Women's military service marked by selfless valor

Although the official history of women in the military began in 1901, women have worked with the military since the American Revolution. Some of their notable accomplishments have included:

- Margaret Corbin took her husband's place at his cannon after he was killed at the Battle of Fort Mifflin during the Revolutionary War.

- Deborah Simpson and other women masqueraded as male soldiers during the Revolutionary War; many more served the Continental Army by doing laundry and serving as cooks and nurses.

- During the Civil War, Dorothea Dix served the North by working with the mentally ill. Clara Barton, a nurse, founded the American Red Cross. Susie King Taylor served as a nurse for the first South Carolina Volunteers.

- Two Union nurses, Mary Tepe and Anna Ehteridge, were awarded the Kearney Cross for bravery at the Battle of Chancellorsville.

- Sally Louisa Thompkins was commissioned as a captain for the Confederacy by Jefferson Davis.

- In addition to serving as nurses women such as Belle Boyd, Rose O'Neal Greenhow, and Pauline Cushman, served as spies.

- Harriet Tubman, an abolitionist, also served as a nurse, spy, scout, and guide for the Union. In June 1863, she led a raid up the Combahee River in South Carolina, destroying millions of dollars of Confederate property and freeing more than 700 slaves.

- Dr. Mary Walker became the first female surgeon in the Army. In 1865, she was awarded the Medal of Honor.

- Because of the outstanding wartime record of nurses, Congress established the Army Nurse Corps in 1901, with the help of Dorothea Dix.

- The Army did not enlist women in the World War II but employed them as civilians under contract. Many worked as physical and occupational therapists.

- Positions for women in the Services expanded during World War II. The Army established the Women's Army Corps (WAC).

- About 40,000 WACS were assigned to the Army Air Force (Air WACs), the predecessor of the post-war women in the Air Force (WAF).

- In 1948, a ceiling of two percent was established for women in the Armed Forces. This also set a limit for each service to have only one colonel.

- During the Korean War, women reservists from all services were recalled to active duty. A peak strength of 48,700 was reached in October 1952. Except for nurses (four of whom were killed), few women served in Korea. Many were stationed in Japan, Okinawa, and the Philippines.

- Public Law 90-130 repealed the 2 percent ceiling on women in the Armed Forces on Nov. 8, 1967.

- During the 1970s the acronyms WAC, WAVES, and WAF were eliminated.

- In the early 1980s, the Army closed 23 more of the 351 MOS's to women; 38 were already closed. Finding few trained men to take the women's places — especially in nuclear, chemical and biological specialties — 12 MOS's were reopened. Even though the Army ban women from artillery and infantry specialties, they can serve in some signal and missile units functioning close to combat.

- In the Army, there are currently four female brigadier generals on active duty.

- Many women, including female civilians, have complained that combat exclusion provisions have hampered opportunities for advancement.

- The first women to attend the Service academy graduated with the class of 1980.

- The number of women recruits has quadrupled since 1972. There are now over 215,000 women in the Armed Forces.

- In September 1985, Brigadier General Mildred E. Hedberg was appointed the 53rd Adjutant General of the Army, the first woman appointed to such an important post.

- As of 1987, approximately 41 percent of all female officers were assigned to the medical service occupations while almost 20 percent were in administration.

- The highest ranking Black woman in the military is Brigadier General Sherian Grace Cadoria. She was the first woman elevated to that rank in the Provost Marshal Corps. She is currently Director of Manpower and Personnel for the Organization of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

GSMC focuses on middle schools

Parents play key role in teen growth

After a day of classroom study, children head home to another realm of challenges.

"Not only do they begin to question their parents and in turn teachers, but emotionally, frustration sets in quickly."

In keeping with this year's parent involvement theme, Ludwigsburg Middle School is offering a number of activities throughout the week to familiarize the parent to the school.

Because the child is going through many different

"Not only do they begin to question their parents and in turn teachers, but emotionally, frustration sets in quickly."

changes during this period of developmental growth, it's important that the parent provide a sense of consistency, noted Minette. "Parental involvement is extremely important."

Ludwigsburg Middle School, located in the Pattonville Housing Area, is the only DoDDS middle school in Baden-Wuerttemberg. Though there are several schools that enroll this age group, administrators must contend with older high school students or younger elementary age children, said Minette.

"Here at Ludwigsburg, we try to concentrate on the unique needs of these children, and because we are strictly a middle school, total concentration is focused on the academic, social, physical and emotional challenges these children face."

Middle-level educators throughout the Greater Stuttgart Military Community will key on the role of parents as partners' as Department of Defense Dependent Schools begin their celebration of National Middle Level Education Week.

Cosponsored by the National Middle School Association and the National Association for Secondary School Principals, Middle Level School Week, March 12-18, focuses on the uniqueness of this stage of a child's academic and social development, according to Ludwigsburg Middle School Assistant Principal Dr. Ellen Minette.

Children usually go through their greatest physical change during grades 5 through 8 which are generally known as middle-level years. With the onset of puberty, these children, ages 10 through 14, present educators with very special challenges specific to these formidable years, said Minette.

"Educationally, these are the years that abstract thoughts come into play," explained Minette.

"Exploratory courses such as fine arts and science steer the child to take a closer look into their world."

Socially, however, children at this age begin to question adult authority, and though Minette chalks this sense of rebellion up to the growing process, this again presents both administrators and educators another realm of challenges.

"Children at this age begin to re-evaluate their parents. It's the beginning of a realization that their mothers and fathers don't know everything," said Minette.

Four skiers from Stuttgart rode down the slopes at Bertchesgaden in fine fashion, bringing home two first and second place medals and a third place medal from the USAREUR Youth Services Ski Championships held March 4 and 5.

Laurel Archer, a student at Stuttgart American High School, overcame a bad chest cold and finished first in the Senior Girls (age 16-19) division in the Giant Slalom with a combined time of 47:72. Archer also finished second in the Slalom event.

Archer, 17, has been skiing off and on for the past eight years and has lived in Bertchesgaden for three years. Living close to the slopes enabled her to train frequently.

Archer qualified for the USAREUR level by winning the VII Corps Ski Championships.

Mark Shutty of Patch High School finished first in the Senior Boys (age 16-19) division in the Giant Slalom with a time of 40:47. He also qualified for the USAREUR Championships with a victory in the VII Corps YS Ski Championships.

Shutty, 16, has been skiing eight years, virtually half his life, and competed in the Junior Olympics back in the United States.

"The competition was easier in the USAREUR YS Ski Championships than in the Junior Olympics," Shutty said. "In the USAREUR Championships, the skiers range from almost beginners to very competitive. In the Junior Olympics, everybody was good."

James Wilson and Joel Shutty, both from Patch, placed high in the Junior Boys (age 13-15) division. Wilson finished second in the Giant Slalom and Shutty was less than a half a second behind him to finish third.

Both Wilson and Shutty agree that it's tough to compete against one another.

"We're always within a hundredth of a second of one another," Wilson said. "I'll finish ahead of him one week and then he'll finish ahead of me the next week. We're pretty even."

Mark and Joel Shutty, who are brothers, and Wilson competed in the Netherlands and German Invitational Junior Championships last week.

Sports injuries can hurt in more ways than one

by Lionel R. Green

There are three sounds often heard in sports! Ow!, Oooh!, and Ahhh!

This article will cover the Ow! in sports leaving the Ooohs and Ahhhs back in the bleachers for those slam dunks, monstrous homeruns and spectacular touchdowns.

Sports and recreation accidents accounted for 25 percent of the military injury accidents reported during the past two years in the GSMC. Recently, that percentage has increased to almost 33 percent, making sports-related injuries the most common injury in the GSMC.

Last year, there were a total of 18 sports-related injuries reported in the GSMC. Injuries in basketball were the most common, followed closely by weightlifting and running injuries. Other sports reporting injuries were football, racquetball, softball, soccer, and volleyball. The two injuries in racquetball were eye injuries because goggles were not used.

"These are just the reported injuries," said Rolf M. Hetterich, the GSMC Safety Manager for the past 30 years. "There might be many unreported injuries because first aid was used."

Most of the sports-related injuries occur to males between the ages of 19-25, Hetterich said. Only two of the 18 reported injuries were to females.

Bruises, contusions, eye injuries, fractures, sprains and torn ligaments were the types of injuries that occurred in the 18 reported incidents.

There were 136 work days lost last year in the GSMC and 313 restricted work days because of sports-related injuries.

"Safety lies with the supervisor," Hetterich said. "There is not enough instruction on how to use the sports equipment safely. Weightlifting equipment, is an example. Often, no one is there to help you use it."
