

GSMC honors 589th Sig Soldier as NCO of the Month

SFC Alejo Quinata

Editor's note: "Competence is my watchword. My two basic responsibilities will always be uppermost in my mind — accomplishment of my mission and the welfare of my soldiers." These words were taken from the Noncommissioned Officer's Creed and refers to the duties of this time-honored corps."

John O. Marsh Jr., Secretary of the Army; General Carl E. Vuono, Army Chief of Staff; and Julius W. Gates, Sergeant Major of the Army have designated 1989 as the Year of the NCO.

Military Communities around the world are recognizing these professionals for their contributions.

GSMC wants to recognize its NCOs by highlighting each month an NCO who puts leadership principles into action.

As a young soldier, Alejo Quinata was going nowhere fast. He knew it and his supervisor knew it.

Today, the 33-year-old sergeant first class, is still moving fast, only now he knows where he's going and he's taking his soldiers with him.

"What really turned my head around was an NCO who took an interest in me," he said. "He explained what soldiering was all about and told me how I could improve my chances of moving through the ranks. So, I took correspondence courses and I went to military and civilian schools whenever I could."

"If it wasn't for Staff Sgt. Calvin Farrar, I wouldn't be where I am today."

As the NCOIC of the Dial Telephone exchange at Robinson Barracks, 589th Signal Company, SFC Quinata puts his technical proficiency and his soldier's welfare above all else.

Sergeants Scotty Hackworth and Jimmie Sutton were both boarded recently for staff sergeant with SFC Quinata's help. These two soldiers, who work with him, were recommended with a 199 score.

The three aren't slowing a bit. The two sergeants are now preparing for the Sergeant Morales Club nominations.

Quinata is already a member since January, just seven months after he arrived at Robinson Barracks.

His concern goes beyond the office. The three have visited each other's homes and have plans for summer outings.

Quinata's commitments also extend beyond his immediate subordinates.

Himself a qualified Master Fitness Trainer, he serves in that capacity for the company. He recently achieved a perfect score of 300 points on his Army Physical Readiness Test and has helped other soldiers in his platoon raise their scores an average of 25 points.

He credits much of his success to his wife, Angie, who he says has been "very patient and understanding."

It's been one surprise after another these past months for the Quinatas and it's not over yet.

They're expecting their second child, "at any moment," he said.

Quinata, who is from Guam, has been in the service for 14 years with two assignments in Germany. Other duties and assignments the communications maintenance support chief has had include: White Sands, N.M.; Korea; and as a drill sergeant at Fort Knox, Ky.

He and subsequent NCOs of the Month receive a plaque from the Service Federal Credit Union, a $50 savings bond from the community bank and a gift certificate package from the Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES).

Monthly selections are made on unit recommendations received by GSMC CSM Glen A. Harlow. Nominations may be submitted through command channels to GSMC HQ by the 15th of each month.

Heidelberg

The most magnificent castle ruin in Germany, the Heidelberg Castle, towers 1,650 feet above a lone paddleboat on the Neckar River. The extraordinary example of German Renaissance architecture, also known as the "fairy tale castle," was built in the mid 16th century and destroyed in the late 17th century. It now is the site of a splendid courtyard and terrace, museum, and wine cellar. Visitors from around the world join ranks with students from Germany's oldest university to swell the city with color and excitement. Some walk through its crooked and winding streets stopping by the Old Bridge. Others take boat cruises or make their way into its many wine cellars. But most converge on the grassy river bank just for the view.

Outlook

Commander's comment

Spring season offers new chance to get active

As March ends this week so do the last vestiges of winter. With the start of the spring season a flurry of activities begin. For those interested in becoming more active in our community, the opportunities are there.

The month of April is observed throughout the Department of Defense as the Month of the Military Child.

It is a time to recognize the particular circumstances of military children and to further improve our programs by making them more responsive to those circumstances. The importance of positive development of our young cannot be overemphasized, for they are our future, our children. From newborns to teens to special needs children, GSMC is planning activities for all military children.

April is also designated as a time in which to honor all the volunteers working to improve the quality of life in GSMC. These local heroes are being saluted by Army Community Services and the subcommunities in which the impact of their work is felt. The spirit of volunteerism and concern for the future binds these two monthly observances together.

The life of a military child is much different from that of a child born and raised in the civilian world. Most of us within the military are aware of this fact. But what does it really mean in terms of the child's life and ability to cope?

Children who are part of the Army family are challenged by frequent moves and school changes. In addition, a parent or parents may be away for extended periods. Accordingly, the family's military community can help the child adjust by providing similar elements of support and stability throughout the world.

As I attend functions and events throughout GSMC, I find there is one group of people who say that they don't have time to volunteer because of work, family, and other commitments. However, another group does find the time to volunteer within this community, usually in addition to working full-time and taking care of a family.

The only difference between these two groups is that the second, those who do volunteer, has made a commitment to improving our community. GSMC volunteers make the choice every week to devote some of their personal time toward enhancing life within the Stuttgart area. You can share in this involvement.

Volunteers are needed in virtually all community activities, especially in those activities that involve children. Whether you have children or not, working with youngsters can be very rewarding. You will find yourself challenged by the refreshing perspective of youth, and you will know that your involvement is really having an influence.

You can be of service by helping with school activities or trips, coaching sports, leading Scouts, or by developing another avenue of involvement. These type of youth services serve as positive influences in the life of military children. But more than that, they are beneficial to the individual volunteering and the overall community.

There are many ways to get involved and participate in the life of GSMC. With the coming warm weather, there are many outdoor activities available. As you make your plans, keep in mind that spending a couple hours per week volunteering in any capacity can make a big difference.

If you choose to volunteer to work with military children, this difference can be multiplied ten fold. By participating in the development of GSMC's children, you are shaping the future of the Army and the future of our country.

This spring take the time to get involved. The rewards will be more than worth your time.

Take care of soldiers.

Single parents must balance between family and military

by Loretta L. McGinley
Family Life Center Therapist

Picture a one-parent family — it could be your own or one you're acquainted with. What do you see? A sole parent frantically running about the house cleaning, while dinner's boiling on the stove and the children are fighting with one another? A soldier wearily getting his/her child out of bed and bundled up in the early hours of the morning in order to drop it off at the sitter's and report for an alert? Chances are what you saw was generally negative, involving great stress and turmoil for both parent and children. A key to family health is in understanding and effectively handling the special challenges unique to the single parent family.

One-parent families exist through choice — deciding to stay single while raising children, divorce, death of a spouse or the extended work-related absence of a spouse. It has been estimated that approximately 16% of all American families are headed by a single parent, usually a woman. Given these high statistics, single parenting is obviously a common and accepted way of life. What are the special challenges of a one-parent household? When one parent without a partner manages the affairs of a family, it can mean twice as much responsibility and twice as many demands on your time and energy — in short, a lot of work. Concerns to be handled alone include economic, emotional, parental, and practical. Time is a valuable commodity for the single parent. Balancing time for work, children, household maintenance and self-care can be an endless juggling act.

So, how can that "juggling act" be managed successfully? A starting place is in establishing priorities: taking care of your own personal needs is a must if you are to successfully manage all other responsibilities. Be good to yourself: take pride in your accomplishments, acknowledge your strengths and appreciate that you're doing the best you can with your current life-style. Give yourself permission to be "selfish" and to do whatever it takes to develop and pursue some personal goals. Given the number of stresses to be handled, it's important to take care of your physical and emotional well-being. Develop and maintain a support network of friends.

A next "must" priority is in developing your relationship with your children. Don't try to be a "super-parent." Be willing to divide up household chores and to involve children in decision-making. Take some time each day to listen to and talk with each child. One particular challenge for the single parent is in dealing with the absent parent. Answer questions your children may have about this parent in as open and honest a way as you can — withholding information can fuel their fears and feelings of guilt and responsibility for family problems. Avoid criticizing the absent parent and competing for being the "favorite" parent. Your children will appreciate quality time spent listening and playing together on a daily basis, and will eventually come to see through superficial attempts to "buy" their love (with presents, special favors, trips). Be willing to both set up family rules and to follow through with appropriate discipline when rules are broken.

And lastly, it's important for the single parent to consider effective work and household scheduling and management. Good planning is essential in meeting needs for each. Have children help in doing household chores, and try to make work fun. Be willing to simplify your life as much as possible by changing some of your high standards of cleanliness and look for ways to cut corners.

Single parenting does offer some unique challenges, but they're challenges which can be successfully met. The Chaplain Family Life Center at Robinson Barracks offers parenting classes to assist parents with more effective ways of handling their children; call 420-7022 for information about upcoming classes. Contact your local Army Community Service office, if you are interested in starting a single parent support group.

President proclaims March Red Cross Month

Volunteers spark GSMC aid efforts

President Bush has proclaimed March as Red Cross Month. He assumes the position as honorary chairman of the American Red Cross, a title that's been held by every sitting president since Theodore Roosevelt.

The Red Cross has become a venerable American institution. It's not hard to see why.

In GSMC alone last year, Red Cross offices at Robert Barracks and Panzer Kaserne assisted approximately 4,500 servicemen and women, according to GSMC Red Cross Station Manager Lynn Hall. Hall said that in functions such as communicating with families, verifying emergencies, and in helping with personal and family problems; GSMC's Red Cross spent $378,000 last year.

became a reality through the good efforts of 116 volunteers, including those who presented and taught over 240 courses in health and safety for community residents, Hall noted.

In the proclamation, President Bush urged all Americans to support the work of the Red Cross, calling attention to the organization's nearly 3,000 chapters and military installations across the United States. In addition, the president praised the more than 3 million young people for their support of Red Cross blood drives and community activities.

"The strength of the Red Cross can be seen every day, everywhere, through the work of people who believe that a successful life must include serving others. It is through their commitment that a bright red cross on a white banner continues to mean hope, dignity, and compassion to thousands of people in need, both here, at home, and around the world," the president said.

The president's proclamation kicked off a month-long round of activities in chapters and military stations throughout the country. Supported by the efforts of more than 1 million adult volunteers, units have tied fund raising membership drives and volunteer recruitment festivities to the national Red Cross theme "Somewhere, somebody needs help."

Last year, Red Cross disaster workers responded to more than 50,000 emergencies throughout the country.

Services provided to 4.2 million disaster affected persons included emergency food, clothing, shelter, and medical assistance. Bush also noted the efforts of the Red Cross in responding to international disasters such as the Dec. 7 Armenian earthquake.

Emergency communications, leave verification assistance, counseling, financial help, and assistance with benefits for active-duty military, veterans, and their dependents were services provided more than 2.6 million times through the Red Cross.

Other Red Cross programs highlighted in the presidential proclamation include Red Cross health and safety training for more than 7.1 million persons last year and Red Cross provision of 6.4 million persons last year and Red Cross provision of 6.4 million units of blood for the ill and injured. In addition, the president commended the Red Cross for its work in AIDS prevention through education.

Although mandated by the United States Congress to provide disaster relief and social services to the military, the American Red Cross is not government funded. Financial support comes from private donations, primarily United Way pledges, membership drives, and corporate gifts. The International Red Cross was founded 125 years ago by Henry Dunant. The American Red Cross will celebrate its founding 108 years ago by Clara Barton in May.

MCN offers assistance for soldiers in Stuttgart

by Jeff Schutts
30th Medical Group

Soldiers and family members in GSMC who are experiencing difficulties with military life in Germany now have a new resource center to which they can turn for advice and assistance.

The non-governmental Military Counseling Network (MCN) has recently established a national office at the Jugendhaus in Sindelfingen-Mitte, Kueblerstrasse 4, telephone 07031-87104. The office will be open Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m., with a 24-hour "GI Phone Line" always available for messages.

The Military Counseling Network is an organization of civilian counselors, social workers and legal advisors scattered throughout Germany. It is designed to aid soldiers or dependents who need legal advice or who are suffering from domestic strife, racial discrimination or sexual harassment. In addition, MCN provides counseling for those troubled by moral or spiritual conflicts arising from duties in the military.

Although they are civilians, MCN counselors are specially trained in relevant aspects of military life. They keep abreast of everything from the Uniform Code of Military Justice and types of discharges to personnel regulations and common social tensions. German and American lawyers, clergy, therapists, and counselors volunteer their services to support the organization.

Recently, the MCN has expanded and specialized some services. MCN counselor Janice Hill is coordinating a new program on "Women and the Military," which will address the unique problems faced by women soldiers and military wives within the military milieu.

Additionally, the MCN publishes a quarterly German-English newspaper, The Bridge, designed to improve communication between the respective communities. MCN also participates in church activities and occasionally sponsors workshops and study groups.

The group's national director, William Boston, formed MCN three years ago in Mutlangen after recognizing a need, on occasion, for soldiers to seek non-military social and legal counsel. MCN is an outgrowth of CCCO, a Philadelphia-based military counseling organization.

Small, but active and dedicated, the Military Counseling Network promises to offer yet another viable support system to American families stationed in GSMC.

Customs

Restrictions apply to gambling device imports

U.S. Customs restricts the importation of gambling devices into the U.S. "These are any sort of machine or mechanical device designed primarily for gambling, says Galen G. Garlick, U.S. Customs Advisor to the European Command, "which may entitle the operator to a reward through the application of chance." These are easily available here in Europe, but you need written approval from your State Attorney General and the Justice Department to ship one back home.

Write to your Attorney General's office first requesting permission to import your gambling device. Then send the State approval to this address for a Federal import permit: Justice Department, Mrs. Gladys Tayloe, Rm# 300A, 315 9th Street NW, Washington, DC 20530. "Show these documents to the customs inspector who comes to look at your household goods and you'll have to register your slot machine when you get back home and your state may have other restrictions. Find out what these are from the State Attorney General when you write.

Lt. Col. Valerie Perea

VII Corps' highest ranking woman stood her ground

by Steve Snyder
Stuttgart Citizen staff

"When I came in the Army in 1970, women were not allowed to wear fatigues, carry a weapon or use the gym (at my first assignment), recalled GSMC's Director of Logistics, Lt. Col. Valerie Perea.

"We've come a long way since then," she added, "but we have a long way to go."

She is one soldier who's gone the distance. She's currently the highest ranking female in VII Corps and the second senior-ranked woman in the transportation corps Army-wide. Her military career personifies the changes and challenges facing women over two turbulent decades.

Born and raised in Sacramento, Calif., Perea was an accomplished dancer (tap, ballet, and modern) in high school and later became equally adept at gymnastics while in college. She went to Japan in 1964 to see the Olympics and spent three months training with members of that country's national gymnastic team. In 1966 she dropped out of college and joined the Peace Corps, where she coached the National Female Gymnastic Team of Venezuela. The experience opened her eyes.

"The Peace Corps was a significant emotional event in my life," she said. "I was politically naive and thought all elected officials were interested in doing good. I finally realized we were not always doing the best things or dealing with the best people," she noted. "If you don't like an organization, change it," was a lesson she gleaned from her tour in the corps.

influenced her. "I realized that it was possible to retain my integrity and still remain in the Armed Forces," Pera noted.

'The standard thing (in the Army at that time) was the necessity for a woman to prove herself.'

Perea returned to college in 1968, changing her major from theater to international relations (her sister Carol took the theater path and appeared in the play "Cabaret" on Broadway). She graduated from Sacramento State University in 1970. The Army paid for her final year in school in return for a two-year commitment. Her education in the real world was about to begin.

"I thought everyone in the Army was a redneck killer," she said. Basic training in Alabama didn't make her disposition any sunnier. But at her first assignment at Fort Sill, Okla., she met some thoughtful professionals who didn't fit the negative stereotypes. They

After serving as test control officer in artillery school at Fort Sill for two years, she pulled recruiting duty in Nebraska from 1972-74. Perea then went to Fort Carson, Colo., where she assumed responsibility for integrating 1,500 women soldiers into predominately male units. She was, in fact, the last commander of a WAC unit in the Army. In 1976, Perea was sent to Washington, D.C., to take part in a congressionally-mandated study of females in the Army.

Conducted by the U.S. Army Research and Development Institute (a D.C. think tank), the famed "MAX WAC" study sent various commissioned officers out to evaluate different units and determine the optimal number of women that could be attached to a unit without losing maximum effectiveness. For a year, Perea's study group looked at units Army-wide, some containing as many as 35 percent females, others lacking women altogether. The final report concluded that units could safely go as high as 50 percent female without degrading combat readiness. Women, indeed, were viewed as strong assets wherever they were assigned.

"The standard thing (in the Army at that time) was the necessity for a woman to prove herself," Perea recalled.

Perea continued to prove her mettle. Among other assignments, she served a year with the 2nd Infantry Division in Korea. In 1985, she became the first female transportation officer on the Department of the Army staff. She held that position for 18 months before coming to Germany. Perea spent another 18 months as VII Corps G4 before arriving at GSMC to undertake her present duties.

Looking back on her career, Perea sees the Army "as one of the few occupations where a female can get equal pay, equal rank and equal opportunity." She thinks "we need more women at a higher level in the Army" because women are "not afraid to stand up and be counted."

At this point in her career, Perea admits to being "tired but it's important to stay in." Speaking of the progress women have made in the Army, she says that "when one door closes, another opens."

The colonel has opened a few, herself.

Females rate today's Army: fair, professional to get along with," she said.

The 19-year-old native of Yelm, Wash., serves as an administrative clerk (71 L) and has been in the Army six months now.

Pvt. 2 Stephanie Donham, 128th Combat Support Hospital, Flak Kaserne, is 19 years old, a 71 L and has completed six months in the Army. Like Fleming, Donham took basic training at Fort Jackson, S.C.

Donham left her home in Alliance, Ohio, to join the Army for the "education, experience and travel." Eventually, she hopes to obtain a college degree in business administration. Her MOS trained her for "a job such as what I'll be doing in business," she said. The perky private "likes the idea of traveling across in Europe" but admits to being homesick at first before she adjusted to life in USAREUR.

"I've had a lot of civilian jobs but they have more respect for you here," Donham said, referring to the fact that the Army, unlike many civilian business environments, does not make sharp status distinctions between clerical and administrative slots.

Patricia Farley has been soldiering for 16 months now and pinned on a specialist rank last week. The 19-year-old native of Campiti, La. (near Shreveport) works for Security, Plans and Operations and is assigned to HHC, 6th ASG at Robinson Barracks.

Spec. Farley considers the Army to be "a good place to start," just like the TV ads say. She's interested in the "educational benefits and wants to better myself." In Farley's view, the Army maintains "discipline and treats people like adults by giving them responsibilities." That's important, because for Farley the Army represents "my first job and my first paycheck."

The quietly vivacious clerk/typist admits to being scared in basic training and somewhat shook up upon receiving orders for Germany. But "I feel I've grown," she said, and now considers Germany to be "fun, exciting and definitely different. Now, I take the train everywhere," checking out a "different culture" while simultaneously "learning a lot about the Army on my job."

Farley's Army education has proven to be overwhelmingly positive, too. "In my unit, women are treated the same as males — we're accepted," she noted. A roommate helped her to adjust to life overseas and Farley credits workers in her office with going out of their way to smooth her adjustment to her job. Unlike friends back home, "soldiers have goals" and there "are a lot of people I respect" in the Army. She reserves special praise for "those leaders who lead lives that you want to follow."

"I really feel good about myself here. I feel I'm making a difference and doing something that really counts," Farley said.

The ambitious go-getter "really wants to go to college" in preparation for an eventual career in teaching. She's already knocked off several college courses here. Farley says she's glad she enlisted and predicts that "when I go back home I will definitely relate differently to others."

As another ad says, "be all you can be."

Experience attracts soldiers

By Steve Snyder
Stuttgart Citizen staff

The status of women in today's Army has consistently improved over the last 20 years. Superior performances by trailblazers (such as Lt. Col. Perea) have led to the recognition that females make significant contributions in fielding a highly-motivated, professional force. While both women and the Army benefit from what each gives the other, the relationship demands that both make adjustments. To live is to maneuver.

Pvt. 1 Michelle Fleming, HHC, 93rd Signal Bde., Krabbenloch Kaserne, is a case in point.

Fleming "came in the Army to be on my own" and was pleasantly surprised to discover that "the Army treats you better than I had heard." She's treated, in fact, "no different than from how a man is treated," she said. Her main adjustment comes from "getting along with others from so many different backgrounds. At first, they're hard

RB girls shoot for the future

Foursome proves girls can hack boys basketball

They are the Mistresses of Defense. They're the Bad in Baden-Wuerttemberg.

And they're all planning to play high school basketball.

Gretchen Manaugh, Lanee Junghans, Ellen Carey, and Rachel Blades are a foursome that wreaks havoc in opposing teams' offenses with their aggressive style of defense.

In fact, they were an integral part in Robinson Barracks bid to win the 1989 Baden-Wuerttemberg Junior "A" Championship for 13-15-year-olds.

A bid that fell short two games.

That in itself is a noble accomplishment, but what's nobler is the fact that they are girls playing in a boy's league. And if it wasn't for their longer hair and touch of make-up here and there, you could never tell the difference between them and the boys out on the court.

The girls had their reasons for playing basketball in a male-dominated league.

"I played to get enough practice for basketball next year," said Gretchen, 14, from Madison, Ind.

Ellen and Rachel said they played simply because they enjoyed the game, and Lanee said she played because, "My mom made me."

"They're real aggressive," said Earl Winburn, the coach of RB. "They play some of the best defense I've seen for this age group."

The boys of RB seemed hesitant in giving praise to their female teammates.

They definitely know how to play," said Eric W. Terrowd, the team's second leading scorer. "But they got intimidated easily."

The quartet finds playing basketball against boys a challenge, and the boys soon realize that it's a challenge for them playing against these girls.

"They (boys) would get mad because I was real aggressive," Gretchen said. "I would hear them in the huddle saying 'I got her,' and 'I'll take her.'"

Ellen, 13, from Indianapolis, Ind., added, "It took them a while to realize that we're just like them."

Despite the slight adjustments for the girls, they do gain some benefits.

"We're definitely better basketball players from playing against the guys," said Lanee, 14, from Orlando, Fla.

Both Rachel and Gretchen agree that they improved immensely by playing in the same league with the boys.

The girls do feel the pressures of being in the minority though.

"The guys make fun of us," Gretchen flatly stated.

Rachel, 13, from Nashville, Tenn., looks at the ridicule as a motivating factor.

"I think it makes us try harder," she said.

They all consent to the fact that there is adversity to deal with in playing on a male-dominated basketball team.

Perhaps Ellen summed up their situation best.

"There's no difference between the girls and boys just the players."

Now, that basketball season is over, they can sit back and relax, and so can their opposition.

But not for long, because these girls will be back next year.
