The impact we want to leave on someone is how we treated them. We never know how many lives we touch. Every day, you need to put your best foot forward, because you don't know whose life you're touching. They will remember it.

RHONDA HUTSELL

PERSONAL FINANCIAL READINESS SPECIALIST

ARMY COMMUNITY SERVICE
DIRECTORATE OF FAMILY AND MORALE, WELFARE AND RECREATION

Hutsell will retire Friday, after 36 years of federal service, including work with the Army, Air Force, Marine Corps and Navy.

Why did you decide to become an Army civilian?

After getting married and moving to an isolated Naval installation in Argentina, Newfoundland, Canada, I took a volunteer position in 1985, with the Directorate of Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation as a women's basketball coach. Since then, I've worked for the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Air Force and the Army.

What brought you to Fort Leonard Wood?

I'm originally from Houston, Missouri, so after moving every two years for so long, we came home.

What is the best part about your job?

The highest point, I think, has been seeing people enjoy growing. And as they grow, you grow, because when you have fulfilled your duty, then you see it through others. The impact we want to leave on someone is how we treated them. We never know how many lives we touch. Every day, you need to put your best foot forward, because you don't know whose life you're touching. They will remember it. I don't know how many lives I've touched, but I know I've touched a lot.

What has been your greatest accomplishment as an Army civilian?

My greatest accomplishment was building Information Tours and Travel and the volunteer program for Fort Leonard Wood, along with succeeding at becoming a certified personal financial counselor.

What advice would you give to someone considering a career as an Army civilian?

Do it because it's a calling for you, and if you don't enjoy it, get out of it. If you don't enjoy helping others, then you will have a hard time moving forward. But if you enjoy helping others and serving people, who are serving you or your freedom, then you'll enjoy your job.
